2d Choice Majority Is Claimed For Farley

Roosevelt to Permit Nomination, Decline, Party Leaders Say; Reject Any 'Leftist'

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, April 28.—Postmaster General Farley will go into the Democratic National Convention with a majority of the 1,100 delegates pledged to his Presidential candidacy if President Roosevelt does not seek a third term, it was said today by Democratic leaders of national prominence.

The Farley strength in 21 Northern and Western States, together with Alaska's six votes, was placed at 482 delegates. Farley's supporters estimated that pledges from the Pacific Coast, and from Northern States not included in the Farley column, will bring his strength to about 600 votes.

These Democratic chiefs said that the President will not try to shatter the third-term tradition, but will permit his nomination to be made and then decline it.

Would Reject "Leftist"

This course, according to the leaders, would enable Mr. Roosevelt to show his opponents that he could get the nomination, and more important, permit him to dictate the ticket.

Democratic spokesmen said the convention, while prepared to nominate the President for a third term, would balk if the President's selections were New Dealers of the leftist type. The President, they held, should leave the delegates to nominate a ticket without dictation, once the President was out of the race. However, they agreed, the ticket should be one that would meet with the President's approval.

It was said that while Farley, in the interests of party success, would be willing to accept second place on the ticket with Secretary of State Hull or a Democrat of his type, he would not permit the Corcoran-Cohen-Ickes group to shove him to one side.

Two Big States in Balance

The delegates from the 21 Northern and Western States claimed for Farley, in the event the President is not a candidate, do not include Illinois, with 58 delegates, or New Jersey, with 32. There delegates from both States are pledged to the President, and neither Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City nor Mayor Edward J. Kelly of Chicago, who will control their respective delegations, have indicated any second choice.

Following are the delegates claimed for Farley:

Connecticut, 16; Delaware, 6; Iowa, 22; Kansas, 18; Maine, 10; Massachusetts, 34; Michigan, 38; Minnesota, 22; Missouri, 30; Nebraska, 14; New Hampshire, 8; New Mexico, 6; New York, 94; North Dakota, 8; Ohio, 52; Pennsylvania, 45; Rhode Island, 8; South Dakota, 7; Utah, 8; Vermont, 6; Wisconsin, 24; Alaska, 6; total, 482.

Pennsylvania has 72 delegates, but only 45 are claimed for Farley.

South Dakota has 8 delegates. All but one are said to be Farley's.

U. S. Chamber Sessions Open In D. C. Today

Optimism Keynote As Business Leaders Gather in Convention

The strongest feeling of optimism since 1933 was reported here yesterday as leaders in business from every part of the Nation gathered for the start today of the twenty-eighth annual meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

"Build America!" is the slogan that representatives from 2,000 trade groups and 1,600 communities have taken for the four-day session, a slogan John W. O'Leary, chairman of the chamber's executive committee, pharaphrased as:

"Keep America first!"

The jigsaw puzzle of national business conditions will be fitted together in talks today by spokesmen for six geographical regions after nomination of district directors and an opening address by O'Leary.

"How's Business?"

"How's Business?" is the question that will be answered in six parts by Porter W. Carswell, president, Waynesboro Chamber of Commerce, Waynesboro, Ga., for the Southeast; Russell K. Smith, executive vice president, Bank of America, San Francisco, for the West; Walter D. Fuller, president, Curtis Publishing Co., Philadelphia, for the Northeast; Col. T. H. Barton, president, Lion Oil Refining Co., El Dorado, Ark., for the Southwest; Walter Harnischfeger, president, Harnischfeger Corporation, Milwaukee, for the North Central section, and Lee R. Girton, president, Girton-Adams Ice Co., Sioux Falls, S. Dak., for the Northwest.

Questions of foreign policy are expected to loom large on the agenda of the meeting, though chief emphasis will be given domestic problems.

Starting off the discussion of foreign affairs, Dr. Paul van Zeeland, former premier of Belgium, will speak this evening on the world situation at a dinner of the international chamber in the Mayflower Hotel at 7:30 o'clock. At later meetings the delegates will hear of other treatments of world problems from State Department officials and from Admiral Harold R. Stark, chief of naval operations.

Little controversy is expected over the leading domestic questions

Culpeper Man Killed; 6 From D. C. Injured As 4 Cars Collide

A Culpeper, Va., man was crushed to death early yesterday when his car was in collision with another and overturned, and later, on route 211, a mile west of Camp Washington, eight persons were injured, six of them Washingtonians, in a four-car smash-up.

The six Washingtonians injured were Mrs. Marion O'Leary, 45; her daughters, Marion Lee, 12, and Norine, 14; Jeff O'Leary, 17, all of 3151 Mount Pleasant street northwest, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry K. Seabright, of 3803 Legation street northwest.

Walter Winfree, 37, and Mrs. Bernice Winfree, 36, of 2238 North Nottingham street, Arlington, were taken to Alexandria Hospital. Seabridge was admitted to Emergency Hospital here in an undetermined condition, while hospital physicians released Mrs. Seabridge.

H. L. Trenary, 42, said by Fairfax County police to have driven the car occupied by the O'Learys and said to reside at their address, was released under $500 bail on a charge of reckless driving.

Police reports indicated Trenary's car struck a second machine—believed to have been occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Seabridge—and then skidded across the road and into the car occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Winfree.

Two Men Held

At this juncture, according to police, a car driven by Benjamin K. Kibler, of Arlington County, struck one or the other of the already smashed automobiles. Kibler, they said, was not injured, but his automobile was badly damaged.

The Alexandria hospital said the Winfrees and O'Learys suffered cuts and bruises. None was believed seriously hurt.

Edward Furr, 20, garage mechanic in Culpeper, was crushed to death under the wreckage of his automobile on the highway three miles west of Culpeper and two Fairfax County colored men, alleged occupants of the car that struck Furr's machine, are being held on hit-and-run charges.

The accident occurred at 3 a. m. yesterday. Culpeper County Sheriff

Apartment Fire in D. C. Routs 100

Three-Alarm Blaze Sweeps Roof, Attic; Woman, 80, Takes Dog to Safety

Nearly 100 persons were driven from their homes last night by a three-alarm fire that swept the roof and attic of the Stanhope Apartments, 735 New Jersey avenue northwest.

Children were carried from their cribs by parents. Aged persons made their way to safety down fireescapes.

The fire broke out at 11:25 p. m. When the first fire-fighting equipment reached the building the roof was ablaze. A second and, then, a third alarm were quickly sounded.

Woman, 80, Saves Dog

Mrs. M. Agnes Rae, 80, said she was awakened at about that time by the sound of flames crackling in the corridor walls. She snatched up her dog and fled.

Most of the occupants had only time to snatch up dressing gowns and a few possessions. Mrs. Nelly Nielsen, 80, reached the street from her second-floor apartment via the fire escape.

At least 30 residents came down the fire escapes from the fourth floor. These included Mr. and Mrs. George Chiringa who carried their daughters, Irene, 1, and Julia, 9; Mr. and Mrs. Constantine Vasilin, and Mr. and Mrs. George Dashuras.

Refinery Burns Up

Five hours earlier 1,500 persons witnessed the spectacular destruction by fire of the Hydro Refinery, Spa Spring road, Bladensburg, Md., where six terrific explosions threatened tanks of the Washington Suburban Gas Co.

Traffic on Baltimore boulevard was tied up for miles when thousands of motorists, attracted by the blasts and a plume of heavy black smoke, crowded to the scene. Damage was estimated by Harold F. Clark, of 4408 Georgia avenue, one of the owners, at $30,000.

Flames Leap 200 Feet

J. H. Sanbower, employe of the Hyattsville Ice & Fuel Co., said he heard six explosions "just like cannon firing" in quick succession, then saw flames leap 200 feet skyward. Tops of several tanks in the warehouse were blown through the roof.

By the time firemen, summoned by Morris Hampton, of Suitland, Md., gas company employe, arrived, flames had swept through the corrugated steel building and were beyond control. Their efforts were bent toward saving large storage tanks in the refinery yard and protecting the gas company plant across a Baltimore & Ohio freight spur.

Clark said the warehouse contained six tanks, of which four were filled with 10,000 gallons of oil for

New U.S. Unit To Enforce Neutrality

Agency to Handle Law Violations; Tinkham Scores Roosevelt, Hull

By William V. Nessly
Post Staff Writer

Establishment of a Neutrality Laws unit of the Department of Justice to have charge of all prosecutive action in violations of laws designed to keep the United States out of war was announced last night by Attorney General Jackson.

The unit, under direction of Lawrence M. C. Smith, will deal with all such cases as foreign enlistments, treason, sedition, espionage, sabotage, or kindred offenses, but, Jackson said, will concern itself with civil rights of individuals involved as well as protection of the national interest.

Formation of the unit was announced about the same time Representative Tinkham (Republican), of Massachusetts, was charging that the country in order to remain at peace "must remove from leadership President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Hull."

As if in reply, Postmaster General Farley, at New York, declared that "every effort is being made by those in charge of your affairs in Washington to see to it that this country does not become involved in any war."

"Uniformity of Policy"

"Uniformity of policy" throughout the country, apparently designed to prevent repetition of such incidents as the arrest and subsequent freeing of 17 persons in Detroit on charges of enlisting troops for the Spanish loyalist forces, is the objective in creating the new Justice Department unit.

Charges had been made in Congress and elsewhere that "third-degree" methods were used in the Detroit arrests, and on becoming Attorney General, Jackson ordered prosecution dropped.

The unit "will not supersede or overlap" the work of the FBI, the Attorney General said, but will determine what prosecutive action should be taken in cases investigated by the FBI and supervise or expedite the prosecution.

Pennsylvania Graduate

Prosecutions or arrests in neutrality or similar cases, however, will be authorized only by the Smith unit. Uniformity of policy has not been possible, Jackson said, when prosecutions are initiated by district attorneys. Standards to govern a prosecutive policy are desirable, he added, since some of the statutes involved "prescribe only the most general classifications of offenses."

Selected cases will be sent to the district attorney or to the criminal

The Schroeders Visit The Post

Pa Schroeder, Nebraska farmer, felt the dust sweeping his farm and watched the grasshoppers eating the kernels from the rye heads, while the droughts dried his fields.

He went to the house, called up his wife and children Johnny, Helen, Billy, Betty, Douglas, Floyd and Amy and set out in a dilapidated car for Missouri to pick fruit.

And when, at last, this failed him, he started trampling out the vintage with his own feet and set his personal grapes of wrath to family music. Pa Schroeder prospered.

Facing 2 Defeats in Congress, Roosevelt Sees Leaders Today

President Roosevelt returned yesterday from his Warm Springs, Ga., rest facing two possible Congressional defeats as the Capitol Hill session moves into its final month.

Anticipated adoption of some amendments to the Wage-Hour Act, over Presidential opposition, and the possibility of Senate approval of the House-passed Walter-Logan bill as a check on the many administrative agencies both posed problems for Mr. Roosevelt when he confers with legislative leaders this morning.

In addition, the question of whether the House tomorrow will act favorably on Senate increases in the farm bill, on which House and Senate conferees deadlocked, likewise is expected to be given consideration.

The President was greeted at his special train yesterday by Secretary of State Hull with whom, in the train, he checked over latest reports on the troubled international situation. Together, the two drove to the White House and Hull continued on to his hotel.

Mr. Roosevelt was said by his physician, Rear Admiral Ross T. McIntire, to be in "excellent condition" after his ten-day visit to the South to shake off the effects of his recent illness.

House resumes debate today on the wage-hour amendments, with Administration forces fighting especially the proposals by Representa-

Two Other Columns Try to Outflank Allies by Scaling Mountain Passes

By Otto D. Tolischus

Stockholm, April 28.—Allied and Norwegian troops apparently have checked, at least temporarily, the two major German drives in central Norway, directed at Dombas and Storen, key rail junctions 130 and 30 miles, respectively, south of Trondheim.

According to all available reports tonight, the Allied forces still control the Dombas-Storen railway, although German units scaling the mountain passes from the Oesterdalen (valley) are threatening to cut the line at two points.

Fierce fighting is reported in the Gudbrandsdalen (Valley) south of Dombas, but according to Allied reports, the direct German drive on that all-important junction has been halted some 40 miles to the south.

Gains at Roros Slight

As regards the Oesterdalen, paralleling the Gudbrandsdalen to the east, the Norwegian army communique states that the German advance north of Roros "is not worth mentioning." All reports indicate that the German push in that region, apparently designed to follow the railway and highway which swing west of Storen, had been delayed by the destruction of a bridge at Nyplass.

Reports from Brekken, Norway, near the Swedish frontier, however, said the greater part of the German column has left Roros, and is moving toward Nyplass, where a motorcycle detachment, armed with machine guns, has crossed a temporary bridge, and a more solid construction is being rushed to permit transit of transport cars and tanks.

At Roros itself, the report said, only 40 Germans have been left as guards, and no visible precaution has been taken to protect the town, indicating the Germans' confidence in the full success of the operations to crush the scattered Norwegians to the east.

Complete silence today veils the progress of two German columns pressing westward over mountain roads from the Oestendalen, with the intention of cutting the Dombas-Storen Line.

Cut Off Allies

The southernmost column, moving west from Alvdal through Fordal, was assumed to be nearing Hjerkinn on the railroad, 20 miles northeast of Dombas. There the Allies were rumored to be awaiting the Nazi motor column in "strong positions."

The other column, moving northwest from Tynset toward Berkak, on the railroad 20 miles south of Storen, was reported yesterday at Inset, three miles from the railroad, but nothing more was heard from it today.

Success of either of these two columns would cut off the Allied

11 Troopships Hit, 3 Sunk, Berlin Claims

Nazis Center Attack On British Transports, Report Cruisers Struck

By Russell Hill

Berlin, April 28.—In an effort to bring the Norwegian campaign to a victorious conclusion before the drain on the Reich's resources and manpower becomes more serious than it is now, the German air force today intensified its attacks on convoyed British transports bringing reinforcement to the British Expeditionary Forces in Norway.

High military circles in Berlin, deprecating the value of Allied assistance that is being given and may be given in the future to Norway, predicted operations in Norway would be successfully concluded "in two, or at the most, three weeks."

A total of 11 transport ships were claimed today to have been either sunk or damaged by German bombs. In addition to this, two British cruisers are said to have suffered direct hits of medium caliber. This is in addition to the high command's report that one cruiser and one antiaircraft cruiser were hit yesterday.

A special communique issued this evening described the attack on the British cruisers near Trondheim, claiming that one of them was hit on the stern and the other on the bow. Since nothing was said about the effects of the hits, it is very possible that the damage inflicted was slight.

The communique said further that one transport was set afire and forced to run ashore, while the crew took to the boats. A second cruiser was reported hit by a medium cali-

British Land More Troops At Andalsnes

Reinforcements Put Ashore Under Fire, London Announces

By James B. Reston.
Copyright by New York Times

London, April 28.—The war office, which now seems to be under fire on the home front as well as in Norway, announced tonight that the Allies have succeeded in landing reinforcements, under fire, at Andalsnes in the wild Romsdal Fjord and have driven off a new German attack at Kvam, 40 miles south of Dombas in the Gudbransdalen (valley).

These reinforcements, it is believed, are being rushed down to Dombas, the important railroad junction, 130 miles south of Trondheim, from where they will be able to back up the Allied troops fighting against the two northward German drives in the Gudbransdalen and Oesterdalen.

The admiralty announced tonight that the approaches to Narvik Fjord have been mined and it is generally believed the object of this is to prevent a joint sea and air attack against the Allied positions.

(The British Broadcasting Corporation suggested this action, which is believed to have extended the mine field laid in the same area the day before the German invasion, "may release some of our ships for other tasks.")

News of the landing of reinforcements, plus the resistance at Kvam, was announced at the beginning of what looks like a difficult week for the Chamberlain government. Ever since the Allied forces started to retreat early last week in the vicinity of Steinkjer, north of Trondheim, and in the Gudbransdal Valley,

Tetrazzini, Noted Soprano, Dies at 66 After Long Illness

Milan, Italy, April 28.—Mme. Luisa Tetrazzini, celebrated Italian soprano who long thrilled opera lovers all over the world, died this morning. She would have been 68 June 29.

Death occurred in a hospital after a long illness complicated by grippe.

For several days Mme. Tetrazzini had been unable to take nourishment other than occasional sips of champagne.

Only a nurse was at her bedside when she died at 8:35 a. m.

Mme. Tetrazzini, who first won great acclaim when she sang in San Francisco in 1904 on her first American appearance, had been living for some years in comparative retirement in her native Italy.

She made a farewell appearance in the United States in 1922 but returned to New York in 1931 for a concert tour which was marred in part by illness. United States music lovers next heard her on January 10, 1938, in a broadcast from Milan.

Mme. Tetrazzini is survived by a sister, Signora Elvira Martucci, at whose home the singer was visiting when she suffered a brain hemorrhage last February 13. A niece, Marta Martucci, is a soprano at La Scala Opera House in Milan. Another sister, Eva Tetrazzini, from whom Luisa obtained her early musical education, died about ten years ago.

The girl, Lola Jane Scott, of 1314 Vermont avenue northwest, was injured while riding with a friend and another couple at 10:45 p. m. Saturday, according to police.

FROM THE INNER SANCTUM

DEWEY IN THE CABINET? After a long talk with Wendell Willkie, I am convinced that if Mr. Willkie were nominated and elected President he would offer Tom Dewey the post of Attorney General in his Cabinet. There is no doubt that he is more than merely toying with the idea.

Harlan Miller

If such a possibility becomes noised about and widely discussed, it would serve a twofold purpose for shrewd Mr. Willkie. First, it would tend to equalize the disparity between Mr. Dewey's long spectacular buildup and Mr. Willkie's late, though impressive, arrival in the Presidential landscape.

* * * *

Second, it would provide Mr. Willkie, if successful, with a rattling good Attorney General who would stir the Republic's imagination in the role, maybe overshadowing even Edgar Hoover as public enemies' Enemy No. 1.

Perhaps the best comeback for Mr. Dewey is to intimate that he might offer Wendell Willkie the Treasury portfolio, or something.

EAVESDROPPERS: Of preposterous tales involving wire-tapping and other melodramatic tricks in the high places there is no end. Another that seems to have nine lives concerns nothing less than the tapping of the White House and State Department wires by an eminently patriotic American.

"—the tallest one yet"

This gentleman, many times a millionaire but still a pretty good friend of the New Deal, became curious to know, so the story goes, what Roosevelt and Hull were hearing and saying.

So he had the wires tapped and listened to them from a suite high in a Washington office building.

The tale is so fantastic that it only goes to show.

* * * *

POLES APART: Hundreds of Americans of Polish origin or descent are still trying to find out whether their old home towns and their relatives have been washed up on the wastika or the hammer-and-sickle side of the new Nazi-Bolshevik frontier.

* * * *

Sometimes a wife's home town turns out to be in Russia, her husband's in Germany. Cousins, uncles, aunts, brothers, sisters and grandparents are divided by the new line of barb wire.

Some wealthy Poles have lost estates on both sides of the line. Several million Americans are affected. They don't know whether to hate Moscow or Berlin.

* * * *

WRONG NUMBERS: Much of the confusion in Social Security mentioned by Mr. Dewey in his Hollywood Bowl broadcast is due to the fallibility of men and women in giving wrong names, numbers and addresses as they move from job to job.

* * * *

With millions of different weekly wage deductions and employer contributions for the Government to handle, the result has been millions of "John Doe" accounts held open pending clarification and correction.

"no buttonholing here"

In many instances there is a suspicion that certain workers have deliberately given wrong data in the hope of collecting double. Others are merely vague, confused or uncertain.

There is even talk of some criminal prosecution where there is plainly a fraudulent intent.

* * * *

LAST REFUGE: Pressure on members of Congress from constituents and lobbyists has become so great at their offices and in the corridors that some of them resort to the last refuge left to them where they cannot be accosted, buttonholed and bombarded with petitions and grievances—the floor of the House or Senate.

They seek sanctuary there despite the speeches they are forced to listen to.

* * * *

No one can invade either chamber except a member, one of his secretaries, or a former member. Constituents can send in their names and ask their Congressman to step outside for a moment. But he always has the good excuse that "something important is coming up" and he can't leave the floor.

* * * *

Not all members are willing to take the oratorical punishment to which they become vulnerable on the floor. But many have become inured to writing their letters, going over their mail or catching up on reading there, oblivious to the oratory.

Stassen to See Rep. Martin, McNary Today

Republican Keynoter Will Meet Several Of Party's Legislators

Gov. Harold E. Stassen of Minnesota, young "keynoter" of the Republican National Convention, arrived here yesterday to confer with Republican Congressional leaders on his speech as temporary chairman of the Philadelphia session.

He will meet with Representative Martin, of Massachusetts, Republican House leader, this morning and later will attend a luncheon, arranged by Senator McNary, Oregon, Senate minority leader, at which several Republican legislators will be present.

Rift in Rhode Island

Providence, R. I., April 28 (AP).—A split in Rhode Island Republican ranks set the stage tonight for a possible wide open battle at the party's State convention tomorrow over the question of sending to the G. O. P. national convention an unpledged delegation or one committed to Thomas E. Dewey.

Former Attorney General Charles P. Sisson, ardent supporter of the New York District Attorney's Presidential aspirations, called a convention eve conference of Dewey backers to map plans for combatting Gov. William H. Vanderbilt's demand for an "unpledged, unstacked" delegation.

At stake were eight seats at the national convention, as well as Vanderbilt's prestige and the possibility that a serious breach might jeopardize Republican chances in the State's fall elections.

Setback Possible

At the same time, the move to tie the delegates to Dewey constituted a potential setback in the desire of all six New England Governors for uncommitted delegations from this section.

Sisson added new kindling to the controversy in a statement last night in which he declared that efforts were being "exerted strenuously" to prevent a free expression at the convention. He maintained that an "overwhelming majority" of Rhode Island Republicans favored Dewey's candidacy.

Sisson declared also that the willingness of the Dewey supporters to adopt a suggestion for adjustment through calm deliberation had been "dictatorially refused."

Back Third Term

Waterbury, Conn., April 27 (AP).—The Democratic State central committee today unanimously indorsed President Roosevelt for a third term.

The 74-member committee also voted to have the candidate for United States Senator and the State ticket named at the State spring convention rather than in the late summer as is customary.

Respect for U. S. Spiritual Tradition Urged by Rabbi

A plea for increased respect for the spiritual traditions of America was voiced last night by Rabbi Harry Silverstone, delivering a Passover message to his Tifereth Israel Congregation.

"We in America must use our spiritual legacy to preserve and perfect the democratic processes here, so that freedom will be handed to our children and to our children's children until the end of time," he declared, "and will be an example for the success of liberty that will lead to the emancipation from tyranny of all children of men in all lands of the earth."

The Passover season, which commemorates the Jews' exodus from Egypt and bondage, began last Monday at sundown, and will be climaxed with services today and tomorrow. Yiskor (memorial) rites will be observed on tomorrow morning in synagogues.

Mrs. Holzhauer Rites Will Be Held Today

Funeral services for Mrs. Anna Holzhauer, 71, wife of Karl Holzhauer, of Bethesda, who died in a Takoma Park sanitarium after a short illness, will be held at 2 p. m. today at the funeral home of W. Reuben Pumphrey, Bethesda. The Rev. Raymond A. Volgeley, pastor of Christ Lutheran Church, Bethesda, will officiate. Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery, Bethesda.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Holzhauer is survided by a daughter, Mrs. Fritz Stoll, Bethesda, and a son, Karl Holzhauer, jr., Arlington, Va.

Mrs. Evans to Address Women Democrats

The Women's Democratic club of Montgomery County will hear an address by Mrs. May Thompson Evans, assistant director of the Democratic National Committee, at its semiannual meeting tonight at 8 o'clock in the hearing room of the Liquid Dispensary Building, East-West highway, Silver Spring.

Mrs. Ralph Wells, president, will preside.

Conservation Bureau Opens Drive Against Waste of Words

Aims to Save the Government Money By Teaching Official Letter Writers A Leaner, More Meaningful Prose Style

By Edward Ryan

Soil Conservation officials in the Agriculture Department are starting on a new program: word conservation.

They are the latest recruits in a drive to improve and shorten Government letters, and the first lessons are being given by James F. Grady, veteran troubleshooter for Government correspondence. Later the supervisors, now students, will become teachers and spread the gospel to other employes.

Grady began his job of streamlining the Federal mail in the California office of the Farm Credit Administration. His work brought him into the Capital as special assistant to the FCA governor.

During the past three years he directed letter improvement in the FCA, helped organize and teach a course in Government letter writing for the American University School of Public Affairs, wrote with Milton Hall a book on the subject, and helped spread the program to other agencies.

This month he took over a new title, correspondence counsellor for the Department of Agriculture, but the job is the same. It will go on from the Soil Conservation Service to other bureaus in the department.

Improving the Government's letters, said Grady, is a "job for years." Although the letters probably compare well with those of private industry, he said, many of them carry an extra load of "hoopskirt" and "stuffed shirt" expressions. Examples of these, taken from Government letters, include:

"To your favor of the 2d instant, making inquiry with respect to the above named William Brown, I respond as next hereinafter set forth . . ."

"As per statement attached hereto . . ."

"I have the matter under advisement."

"The writer wishes to state . . ."

"You are advised that the Congress has specified . . ."

Overloaded letters, Grady estimates, can be cut 30 to 60 per cent, a useful saving when the usual Government letter costs about 75 cents to prepare.

Saving words, however, is only one part of the program. Grady said that about 90 per cent of Government contracts are made by letter, and thousands of citizens judge the Government by its letters. A six-point test of the "satisfactory" letter is a first lesson in the training program, and a score of questions are used to help decide whether a letter is "clear, concise, complete, correct, appropriate in tone, neat and well set up."

With this guide, the soil conservation officials, meeting once a week, are studying letters written in their own agency. They criticize the letters, rewrite them and discuss the new drafts, though a 90-minute conference. Their textbook is a new pamphlet adapted from the book by Grady and Hall.

One special warning has been prepared for the agriculture students, in the list of technical terms to be used "with discrimination." They include: "parity, input-output, principle of time preference, self-liquidating, erodibility, population pressure, alternative investment opportunities, absorption loss, interception and riverwash."

Similar letter writing programs have been organized in the Commerce Department, Home Owners Loan Corporation, and other agencies.

Curran Urges Drive to Keep U. S. From War

Negro Congress Told Fight Against Workers Must Be Thwarted

The "overwhelming sentiment" of the American people against participation in the war must be organized, and at the same time "a drive against the American working people" must be thwarted, Joseph Curran, of New York, president of the National Maritime Union, told a panel session of the National Negro Congress here yesterday afternoon.

"Attacks by the Dies Committee, assaults on the Wagner Act, antitrust indictments against trade unions—these things are not isolated events, related only by coincidence. They are part of a general drive against the American working people—a drive which certain forces believe necessary, if we are drawn into the war," Curran said.

"The poll tax," he continued, "is a menace to all workers, white as well as black. The sooner the Southern worker wins the franchise, wins the right to express himself politically, the sooner the American worker generally will take his rightful place in the government of our country."

Urges Speedy Action

"I would like to be able to say that there is no hurry, but I cannot. On the contrary, I believe that the time in which we can work openly and freely for these things is growing short," Curran added.

At the same panel session in the Departmental Auditorium, Mike Duletsky, of the United Automobile Workers, told of efforts to organize the Ford Motor Co. He said the Negro groups and white workers of the trade union movement must extend unity of action from the picket lines and factories into the broad highway of independent political action, the fight for peace, for jobs and for living up to full civil liberties for all, and a special inforcement of the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution.

Greatest tribute at this session went to Elvira Dale, a middle-aged colored woman from Earle, Ark., who told about hardships among agricultural workers. As she finished with a plea to "do something for us," the audience rose, applauding.

George Brown, of New York, of the Hotel and Restaurant Workers International Alliance and Bartenders League of America, one of the principal speakers on the panel, urged the removal of any "color bars" in unions where "discrimination" remains.

At the same time at a panel on citizenship rights, Charles H. Houston, Washington lawyer, spoke on the movement for equality in education. William H. Hastie, dean of Howard University Law School, discussed legislation, including the antilynching bill.

James A. Brier, of South Carolina, spoke on Negroes' efforts for franchise in that State.

Simultaneously other panel sessions brought discussions on social security and cultural freedom.

More than 1,000 persons attended the congress which closed last night.

1,250,000 Quit WPA for Jobs in Industry; Harrington Says 100,000 a Month Leaving

More than 1,250,000 workers, it was disclosed yesterday, have left the WPA rolls voluntarily during the last 12 months, presumably to take private employment.

Col. F. C. Harrington, commissioner of works projects, made public the figures in connection with President Roosevelt's proclamation of the first seven days in May as National Employment Week. He said 100,000 a month were leaving WPA at the present time, but that many were forced to return to it.

At the same time, Secretary Hopkins reported March income payments were 4 per cent higher than a year ago, although the increase over February was less than seasonal.

The payments covered in the Commerce Department's periodic reports on the national income include wages and salaries received by employes, dividends and interest received by investors, entrepreneurial withdrawals, rents and royalties, and relief payments.

Five Billion Paid

He estimated that payments to individuals totaled $5,936,000,000, making an aggregate of $17,570,000,000 for the first quarter, compared with $16,677,000,000 for the corresponding period of last year. The Febhuary total was $5,567,000,000.

The seasonally adjusted index of payments stood at 87 at the close of March. The index uses 1929 figures as 100. Hopkins said the index had declined 3 points since the first of the year, compared with a 20 per cent decline in industrial production.

The March increase over February was attributed largely to quarterly dividend and interest payments which totaled $827,000,000, compared with $455,000,000 in the previous month. These payments in March, 1939, aggregated $772,000,000.

Harrington, noting that the President's proclamation had placed particular emphasis on the problems of unemployed workers over 40, said nearly half of WPA's rolls were made up of such people.

The question also has concerned Monopoly Committee in its current studies of technological unemployment. Workers over 40, witnesses testified, suffer greatest from technological unemployment.

Puzzling Problem

Although the committee had devoted three weeks of hearings to the question, its chairman, Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, said the problem of what to do about such workers was as puzzling as ever.

"We have no difficulty finding experts who can diagnose the ills, but the doctor who will prescribe the cure has not appeared as yet," he said.

Corrington Gill, assistant head of WPA, suggested a "permanent works program." Some business leaders, including Edsel Ford, president of the motor car company, expressed the opinion other technological advances and private business eventually would bring a normal employment again.

Virtually all witnesses agreed on one fact: That 1939 production was about equal to the boom year of 1929, but that the number of employed persons was 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 less.

Virginia University Airport Dedicated

Charlottesville, Va., April 28 (AP).—Three speakers emphasized the importance to the Nation, in peace and in war, of the student-civilian pilot training program at dedication exercises today at the University of Virginia's 178-acre airport, 4 miles southeast of Charlottesville.

Approximately 2,000 witnessed the ceremonies, including presentation of a United States flag to the airport by the Jack Jouett Chapter of the D. A. R.

Speakers including Dean Walter S. Rodman of the department of engineering; R. Gray Williams, of Winchester, rector of the university, and Thomas W. Ozlin, a member of the State corporation commission.

Hindsight and Foresight

By HOLGAR J. JOHNSON

President, Institute of Life Insurance

RELAX. I haven't anything to sell you. But I spent enough years being a life insurance agent to know that there's something in human nature which makes nearly all of us put up our guards when a salesman appears.

When a man goes in to buy a package of cigarettes, he not only knows exactly what he wants, but speaks right out about it. The same man, wanting to buy a new car, will walk into a showroom and indignantly deny that he has the faintest interest in automobiles. The salesman just grins and waits and pretty soon the old car is appraised and the man is telling his friends that he planned to buy this new car all along!

Now our same man realizes, even though no one has told him so, that he needs some life insurance. Let him alone and he'd never buy it. He knows this about himself and about his fellows. He looks with scorn on a man who leaves his family unprotected.

Yet, unless some agent persuades him to DO SOMETHING, he will probably rock along putting off his own insurance program.

Oh, well, we have clergymen to tell us to be good when we already know we should be. We pay traffic cops to keep ourselves from breaking rules we know are right. And we approve of life insurance agents on the same basis, I suppose. We have to assign someone the job of teaching us thrift and foresight!

Most of us are like the old farmer who said he didn't need anybody to teach him how to be a better farmer; he needed someone to make him be as good a farmer as he already knew how to be!

NOTE: In this regular Monday column, paid for at advertising rates, the Institute of Life Insurance has asked its president to discuss questions of interest to life insurance policyholders. Inquiries may be addressed to 60 East 42nd Street, New York City.

U.S. Should Get West Indies, Senators Say

Acquisition Urged As Defense Measure On Radio Forum

Four Senators, participating in a radio debate, last night agreed that the United States should acquire strategic possessions in the Western Hemisphere as a defense measure.

Mentionad as potential acquisitions "to forge a steel band around us" were French and British isles in the Caribbean and off Newfoundland, Latin American islands in both Atlantic and Pacific, Lower California, Wrangell Island in the Arctic, and Greenland.

Strongest position in the debate was taken by Senator Lundeen (Farmer-Labor), of Minnesota, a member of the Territories and Insular Affairs Committee and sponsor of a Senate resolution seeking purchase of Greenland from Denmark. He implied that seizure of the West Indies from debtor nations unwilling to pay the United States was justifiable should negotiations fail.

Senator Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, Ludeen's committee colleague and author of a Senate resolution for purchase of French and British isles on this side of the Atlantic in part payment for the war debts, urged a wider program.

Reynolds' View

Reynolds would strengthen defenses on both sides of the Panama Canal and in the Arctic against possible aggression by Japanese and Russians as well as by European nations, "so that if we are to be attacked, and if there must be fighting," the the actual warfare will be kept without the confines of the continental United States.

A warning that the United States, in acquiring the new possessions, must do so only through "honorable negotiation," was voiced by Senator Schwellenbach (Democrat), of Washington, a member of the Foreign Relations Committee. This country, he said, had to maintain its moral leadership among the family of nations in order to take a dominant part in establishing a basis for permanent world peace at the end of the current war.

Similarly, Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, also a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, said that any action by the United States required approval of the other 20 American republics in accordance with our "good neighbor" policy.

Jackson Quoted

"Andrew Jackson demanded the seizure of the West Indies more than a century ago," said Senator Lundeen. He quoted Jackson's message to Congress in 1834 as follows:

"'It is a well-settled principle of the international code that where one nation owes another a liquidated debt which it refuses or neglects to pay, the aggrieved party may seize on the property belonging to the other, its citizens or subjects, sufficient to pay the debt, without giving just cause for war . . .'"

Acquisition of the Caribbean islands, Lundeen said, would form our "Maginot line, making the Canal Zone invulnerable and adding absolute protection to our entire coastline, East and West."

Schwellenbach insisted that the American people hoped to play some part in establishing a lasting peace when the present war ends. "To my mind," he added, "that hope will be barren unless we can enter in such a peace conference with a record clear of the taint of treaty breaking on our own part. The only leadership we want to give the world is moral leadership. We must have our own hands clean if we try it."

The debate, presented during the American Forum of the Air, was broadcast via WOL from the Interior Building studios, with Theodore Granik as moderator.

Blast Mangles Hand of Youth Mixing Chemicals

A 16-year-old school boy chemist suffered a severely mangled hand in Alexandria yesterday, when an explosion abruptly halted his attempt to mix chemicals for fireworks.

The youth, Henry Gundersen, of 104 East Walnut street, Alexander, may lose part of the left hand little finger, Alexandria Hospital doctors said last night. Henry also was burned on the face and cut by flying glass.

Gundersen and Raymond Clark, 14, of 103 West Monroe avenue, Alexandria, were preparing the mixture in the rear of the Clark home. Raymond escaped unhurt.

Garand Rifle Best in Use, Congress Told

By the Associated Press

The War Department, anticipating a Senate Appropriations subcommittee investigation, has told Congress that the Gerand semiautomatic rifle has made the American soldier the best armed and most formidable fighting man in the world.

Secretary Woodring sent to the Military Affairs and Appropriations committees of both houses reports on the rifle from infantry and cavalry leaders.

Chairman Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, said a Senate Appropriations subcommittee would investigate the effectiveness of the Garand rifle when it takes up the $784,999,094 Army supply bill this week.

He said the committee may call Melvin M. Johnson, jr., inventor of a rival gun, to investigate his claims that the Johnson weapon is more effective.

Congress has made funds available thus far to purchase 169,789 Garand rifles. The Army wants to acquire 240,559 to equip its initial protective force.

Big. Gen. Joseph Stilwell, commanding troops at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., said in his report that infantrymen who had used the Gerand rifle would as soon go back to muzzle-loaders as to the 1903 Springfield which has been standard.

Maj. Gen. J. H. Kerr, chief of cavalry, wrote that the weight of evidence seemed to indicate that the Garand would be a "highly satisfactory" replacement. He said there had been some malfunctioning as is usual in the case of new weapons but that this was disappearing.

Maj. Gen. George A. Lynch, chief of infantry, said the Garand, which fires eight shots from a clip without reloading, promised more accuracy in battle than the Springfield, which requires manipulation of the bolt to reload after each shot.

Norse, Danish Cash in U. S. Reported at $95,689,000

By the Associated Press

The Treasury reported yesterday that Denmark and Norway had around $95,689,000 in cash in this country at the end of January.

This was the first time that the short-term balances of these countries had been included in the department's monthly bulletin. The figures are issued three months late so that they will be of no value to speculators.

President Roosevelt by a proclamation "froze" the credits of Norway and Denmark immediately after those countries were invaded by Germany.

A balance of $66,986,000 was reported for Norway and $28,703,000 for Denmark.

Other balances reported included Belgium, $166,215,000; Sweden, $162,385,000, and Finland, $23,822,000. All the balances were increased during January, Sweden having the largest gain, $20,156,000.

British Sell, Dutch Buy

The Treasury reported a net liquidation of American securities by foreign owners of $4,479,000 during the month. This compared with a post-war high of $49,689,000 in October and a low of $1,087,000 in December.

British and Canadian investors were among the largest sellers of American securities, while Switzerland and the Netherlands continued to be heavy purchasers. France increased its holdings slightly for the third consecutive month.

$37,595,000 Flows In

The total net capital movement between the United States and other countries for January represented an inflow of $37,595,000, the Treasury said, compared with an inflow of $5,046,000 in December.

Despite war purchases abroad, the total of foreign short-term balances rose $46,704,000 to $2,948,035,000 at the end of January.

British short-term balances declined $43,766,000 during the month to $404,451,000, while the French balance rose somewhat to $290,591,000.

United States balances in foreign countries increased $24,341,000 to a total of $533,043,000.

Alexandria Boy Will Head State Students' Group

Newport News, Va., April 27 (AP).—Dabney Waring, of Alexandria, was elected president of the Virginia State Student Government Association at the sixth annual convention of the organization this morning at the Newport News High School.

Alexandria was chosen as the site of the next convention and several amendments to the association's constitution were adopted. The convention closes tonight following a banquet at 6:30 at the Trinity Methodist Church and a dance at the school cafeteria.

'Love Feasts' Climax Greek Easter Rites

Custom of Forgiving Enemies Is Observed At Service Here

Traditional "love feast" ceremonies at the Church of Saints Constantine and Helen yesterday climaxed the Greek Orthodox celebration of Easter, begun Saturday at midnight.

More than 1,000 worshipers, mingling at the services, followed the ancient custom of forgiving all enemies, and exchanging greetings. Approaching each other, one would declare that "The Lord Has Risen." The other would reply that "He is risen, indeed."

The Rev. Thomas Daniels, leading the rites, urged a strengthening of individual, community, national and international faith and belief.

St. George's Day exercise, honoring King George II of Greece, will be centered today at 11:30 o'clock at the church, with the Greek Minister to the United States, Cimon Diamantopoulos and his staff members expected to attend. Members of local Greek churches have been invited to visit the legation today.

Tops at Yo-Yo

Louis N. Newmyer, of the Westchester Apartments, yesterday was judged the yo-yo champion of Washington. To get the title, the 17-year-old performer had to "shoot the moon," "walk the dog," and "loop the loop" 1,000 times.

Roanoke, Va., April 27 (AP).—Optimist Club members of Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia, attending the sixteenth annual Optimist international district convention, discussed today their extensive boys' work program, conducted an oratorical contest, and elected 1940 officers.

J. Benton Webb, of Washington, was chosen district governor, succeeding Edwin E. Bibb, of Norfolk. Benjamin H. Eagle, Baltimore; Albert H. Morris, Richmond, and Dr. Raymond Murray, Washington, were elected lieutenant governors, and Clif L. Cook, of Washington, was elected treasurer.

Fourteen-year-old Robert Morrison, representing the downtown Baltimore Optimist Club, won the District oratorical contest and will be sent by clubs in the District to the contest at the Optimist international convention in Kansas City on June 16.

Boys from seven clubs participated in the contest which began in the afternoon. The field was narrowed down to young Morrison, a Garrison Junior High School pupil, and 15-year-old Andy Shreve, representing the downtown Washington club, who were in the finals conducted during a dinner dance tonight.

Webb, who operates an engraving business in Washington, lives at 4828 Linnean avenue nothwest. A native of Nashville, Tenn., he came to the District 18 years ago. He is a thirty-second degree Mason and at one time was active in choral societies.

Roosevelt Back, Facing Two Defeats

Wage, Agencies Bills Believed Subjects Of Today's Parley

tive Barden (Democrat), of North Carolina, which would exempt many workers employed in processing of farm products. Chairman Mary Norton of the House Labor Committee is sponsoring milder amendments. Both sets would also exempt certain classes of white collar workers.

Farm Vote Reported Sought

There were reports yesterday that opponents of major changes in the law were seeking the support of farm representatives, in return for which they would back the farm bloc in seeking approval of the Senate increases in farm funds.

The latter are to be voted on tomorrow. The House and Senate conferees agreed on most items in the bill, but the House Representatives refused to approve $212,000,000 for parity payments, $85,000,000 for surplus crop removal, and $80,000,000 for farm tenant loans, all of which were written into the bill by the Senate and must be voted on separately by the House.

While the House debates the proposed wage-hour changes the Senate will turn to consideration of legislation clarifying the power of President Roosevelt to "freeze" assets of Danish and Norwegian nationals in the United States. Little controversy is expected over the bill itself, but Republicans have proposed an amendment to repeal the emergency monetary powers granted to the President in 1933. Administration leaders said there would be no difficulty in defeating the amendment, but considerable debate on it is expected.

Later in the week, the Senate may consider a proposal by Senator Townsend (Republican), of Delaware, to repeal legislation authorizing the Treasury to purchase foreign silver.

Agencies Bill Up Again

Also expected to be taken up by the Senate this week is the Walter-Logan bill, already through the House. It would provide for court review of rules and regulations issued by 100 or more administrative agencies of the Government. Mr. Roosevelt has opposed it on the grounds that it would tend to slow up work of the agencies.

The measure passed the Senate last year in what was termed a coup engineered while Administration forces were poorly represented on the floor, but the vote was speedily reconsidered.

Defense matters will be before a Senate Appropriations subcommittee which will consider the $784,999,000 Army supply bill.

The relief appropriation bill for the fiscal year beginning July 1 is yet to be considered.

In the legislative field of labor there remains also a fight over amendments to the Wagner labor relations law, probably to be reached next week.

Aiming at a June 1 final adjournment of Congress, Mr. Roosevelt plans then to leave on his cross-country trip, dedicating several national parks, and possibly visiting Alaska.

German Press Answers Doubts Of White Paper

Berlin, April 28 (AP).—The press today elaborated on yesterday's White Paper in an effort to convince doubters of its contention that Germany marched into Norway just ahead of a British expeditionary force for which orders already had been prepared.

"Wherever there already was considerable doubt regarding the honesty of the British policy of 'democracy and liberty,' almost complete enlightenment now has occurred," the newspaper Der Montag commented.

"But wherever the camp of English lying, criminal politics still has adherents, there are preparations for more or less swift or careful retreat. They say they must see the documents first."

To answer them, the press alleged that the British army documents purportedly reproduced were found in an iron chest of the brigade staff which the White Paper said was captured at Lillehammer. (The British deny that a brigade staff has been captured.)

French Report Local Victories

Paris, April 28 (AP).—The French high command today reported losses were inflicted on the Germans in local fighting on the Western Front, where otherwise only artillery fire marked the day.

Its evening communique said:

"Nothing to report except some artillery fire and a local encounter west of the Vosges, during the course of which we inflicted losses on the enemy."

Its morning communique said:

"Patrol and artillery activity at various points of the front."

Floyd (Buck), 10, and Amy, 5, dressed in silk cowboy shirts, came up. "I don't want to appear as bragging," Pa Schroeder said, partly to the children, "but part of the mortgage on the farm is paid. I couldn't of done it without my fine family."

His saga of early tribulation was this: Drought, dust and grasshoppers drove him and the family to Missouri to pick apples, September 15, 1935. They lived there meagerly, on hard work, hope and apples. Then the lay-off came in November. Then he and Helen became seriously sick. Debts ran up, and it was not until March 3, 1936, that he could pick fruit again. The work continued until May. They wanted to get back to their farm, but had no gas.

Then, in Shelbina, Mo., Schroeder remembered that he played the fiddle, Johnny the banjo; Helen the accordian; Billy, Floyd and Douglas the guitar and banjo; Betty the drums and Amy the washboard. He set them all to holding forth on a corner. Money rolled into a hat.

"Twenty-five dollars," said Schroeder. "It looked as big as that wall right there." He thought a moment. "It looked as big as the world." Helen remembered: "We were all so glad we kept right quiet, didn't say a word." Schroeder repeated: "A big as the whole world, man."

They Had Ambition

"We didn't have much in the way of instruments, but we had some ambition and they liked us. Well, we stayed four days."

Schroeder saw his opportunity. "Don't think we didn't work. The first months on the road we hardly had a hot meal a month; we slept in parks. Once Douglas fell and broke his arm and Floyd picked the guitar strings while Douglas with his one hand worked the steel. We played for hours in Brookfield, Mo., when it was so hot the wax melted in the accordion. I've got a fine family," Schroeder said.

They played and bargained. He traded a pig for a banjo; borrowed $12 for a set of second-hand drums and paid back the $12; traded the old Dodge for a second-hand school bus. But money was coming in. They have a new bus now, with "Schroeder Family" painted on the sides. They play in good hotels and on the radio. The mother teaches the children and when they stop some place long enough for the children to enter regular school they're well up with the classes.

Helen sews the silk shirts for the children and the children drink nine quarts of milk every day. That was Pa Schroeder's story when he left here yesterday after appearing at the National Folk Festival. Some day his children will work his farm, he declared.

B. H. Whaland gave the colored men's names as Charles Benaugh, 48, of Vienna, and William Boston, 29, of McLean.

Sheriff Eppa P. Kirby, of Fairfax County, who assisted in arresting the two at their homes at 10 a. m. yesterday, said the car in collision with Furr's had been stolen on the night of April 20, at McLean, Va. He said the car belonged to Dr. Roger O'Donnell, of Georgetown.

Hired a Taxi

After the crash, Sheriff Whaland said, the men went to the home of John Ford, colored, who took them to Culpeper. There they hired a taxi and went to Fairfax County. Ford accompanied the sheriff in the search. Benaugh and Boston are being held in the Culpeper County jail.

A man and a woman were arrested at Danville, Va., yesterday in connection with the hit-run deaths late Saturday of three youths, struck down by an automobile near Schoolfield, Va. The dead youths were Melvin Carter and Ernest Canaday, of Danville, and Dalbert Cope, of Lexington, N. C.

5 Tourists Injured

Five tourists were injured early yesterday when their automobile struck a tree on Fourteenth street northwest near Madison drive. Police said Thomas Domenick, 29, of Rutherford, N. J., fell asleep at the wheel.

Besides Domenick, Mary Mangone, 54, and Ruth Mangone, 26, of Rutherford, N. J.; Celia Farano, 40, of New York, and Mary Duccini, 25, of Jersey City, suffered minor injuries.

George A. Lorh, 42, of 936 Twenty-sixth street north, Arlington, Va., was taken to Casualty Hospital when the automobile police said he was driving was in collision with another on C street northwest. Lohr's condition was undetermined.

Mrs. Carnahan, 51, Dies at Her Home

Mrs. Ana H. Carnahan, wife of Frank Carnahan, executive secretary of the National Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, died yesterday at her home, 2700 Connecticut avenue northwest. She was 51.

Born in Osborn, Mo., she came to the District 20 years ago. She attended Ferry Hall School, Chicago. Surviving are, besides her husband, two daughters, Ann E. and Mrs. Janet C. McLaughlin.

Services will be held at the S. H. Hines funeral home, 2901 Fourteenth street northwest, with burial in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

that will be reviewed during the four-day meeting.

Chief interest, it is expected, will center on a talk by Representative Howard W. Smith, of Virginia, whose special committee is now investigating the National Labor Relations Board. Representative Smith speaks Wednesday afternoon on "Can the Wagner Act Be Made to Work?" Amendments to this law that have his sponsorship are now pending in Congress.

Government and Law

In addition, the delegates will consider the relationship of business to government, with accent on such contested laws as the Fair Labor Standards (Wage-Hour) Act, the Securities and Exchange Act and the Logan-Walter Bill to regulate administrative agencies, now pending.

There will be examinations of taxation, unemployment, natural resources, consumer movements, insurance, transportation and foreign trade.

Because this is the first annual meeting of the chamber since the outbreak of war abroad, much time will be given to appraising the effects of the conflict on American business. A session on this topic is scheduled for Wednesday afternoon, with a talk on war and the merchant marine that afternoon and a general session on foreign problems at the final luncheon meeting Thursday.

W. Carey Gibson, jr., president of the chamber, will make a keynote address tomorrow morning and will preside during the four-day gathering.

Bishop Freeman Installs Precentor

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, yesterday afternoon led dedicatory exercises for the new Precentor's Stall at the Washington Cathedral, installing Canon Precentor William M. Bradner therein.

Many pilgrims, including several hundred tourists, witnessed the exercises in the People's Evensong services.

division for prosecution by a special prosecutor, or by one of the regular staff or department prosecutors.

The unit, it was said, will maintain "active contact" with the State, War, Navy and Treasury departments in matters affecting the neutrality laws. One of its first tasks will be to compile the statutes and a digest of decisions relating to them and to "maintain a continuous study of proposed legislation or executive policies, as well as measures, proposals and experiences of other democratic countries in these fields."

Smith, who heads the unit, has served with the RFC and the NRA, and was associate counsel in the investment studies of the SEC which were recently presented to Congress.

Graduate of University of Pennsylvania and of Magdalen College, Oxford University, he later was associated with the Philadelphia law firm of Roberts & Montgomery, of which Associate Justice Owen D. Roberts was the head.

Representative Tinkham's charge that the Administration was moving toward war was contained in a statement in which he referred to "plans formulated by the Administration for the transportation of troops overseas via the port of New York."

Tinkham cited testimony before an I. C. C. hearing at New York City by George C. Randall, chairman of the general committee of port traffic of the Association of American Railroads, who had said:

"Plans at present are set up for the possible transportation of troops."

The Massachusetts Representative, apparently referring to other phases of the general mobilization plans worked out for use in case of war, added:

"This disclosure, taken in conjunction with the fact that legislation for the conscription of man power, for the conscription of business and wealth, for the imposition of confiscatory taxes, and for consorship and espionage, has already been drafted and is embodied in bills pending in Congress, can in no way be reconciled with the repeated assertions of President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull that American participation in European war is not contemplated.

"It is a complete contradiction of such assertions. . . . The American people should be made aware of their danger and be made to realize that those now in charge of our Government are bent on war."

Farley's Assertion

Farley, on the other hand, speaking before 2,000 members of the St. George Association of the New York Postoffice at an annual communion breakfast, said officials here are dominated by determination to keep out of the war.

"I am sure that if we keep our feet on the ground," he added, "don't talk too much, and have a true appreciation of our responsibility, there is no question that everything will be all right."

At the same gathering, Senator Mead (Democrat), of New York, urged his hearers to be on guard against being drawn into the war.

"We must not be pro-Ally, pro-British or pro-anything except pro-American," he said.

Meantime, Miss Marion E. Martin, director of the women's division of the Republican National Committee, urged the Nation's women to review carefully the 1939 industrial mobilization plan and "its possible implications of indefinite continuation of military dictatorship on the termination of the war."

Central Control Held Essential

Saying that centralized control is necessary for the successful prosecution of war, Miss Martin added:

"But under the 1939 plan, it is contemplated that the comprehensive plan of industrial control will not terminate with hostilities, but that the President would continue to exercise such powers after the end of war, and that he would be in a position to do so, so long as he desires."

The 1939 mobilization plan, she said, contains this provision:

"The war resources administrator, as the termination of the emergency is approached, might well study the desirability of proposing the creation of a new and entirely separate agency to deal with the rehabilitation problem. On the other hand, it may be considered advisable, upon the termination of the emergency, to continue the war resources administration as a postwar readjustment administration. Decision as to the organization and composition of such an agency will depend upon personalities, the degree of rehabilitation required, and political and economical factors which would then obtain."

Ryland Church's Last Service Brings Tears to Old Members

The Ryland Methodist Church congregation held its last service yesterday in the church building used for 96 years at Tenth and D streets southwest. In the group leaving the church are Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Fearnow, Charles L. Taylor, Mrs. Nettie Reese, Mrs. Fannie Tiffey, Mrs. Anne L. Powers and Mrs. Mary E. Taylor

96-Year-Old Institution Moving To Southeast Site; Third and Fourth Generations Attend Final Rites

Ninety-six year-old Ryland Methodist Church's last service at its old location yesterday morning stirred memories of other days and drew many a tear from the older members.

"I love every brick in the old church," sighed Mrs. Anne L. Powers, 70, just before the services began in the church at Tenth and D streets southwest, where she has worshiped since the age of 5, and in whose parsonage she was married.

Daughter of a charter member, Mrs. Powers recalled that the congregation would begin this Sunday to worship on its new site near the Branch and Pennsylvania avenues southeast, but assured she "could never really get away from old Ryland," in sprit.

Generations Present

Resident of 1302 Park road northwest, Mrs. Powers' late husband was for many years a trustee of the church. One of the stained glass windows honors his memory.

Mrs. Powers, Mrs. Fannie Tiffey, Mrs. Nettie Reese, Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Fearnow, Mrs. William Leishears, Charles L. Taylor and his mother, 77-year-old Mrs. Harry E. Taylor, the last-named two representing the third and fourth generations of members there, were the "old-timers" who heard their pastor, the Rev. Karl G. Newell, in his final message at old Ryland, urge his flock to carry on the torch of their forebears' faith.

"We go to the new location not empty-handed," he reminded, "but with the rich values of the past guiding us on. We reach back into the past and are sincerely grateful and appreciative of the men who many years ago toiled, suffered and sacrificed."

Organ Goes False

Mrs. C. S. Biggs, widow of a former pastor, played the organ. The fact that the organ went false just five minutes before the service's close brought a chuckle from a former choir member.

"It did the same thing 30 years ago," recalled Vernon C. Ruppert, now a member of Albright Memorial Evangelical Church, and back to old Ryland for his first visit in 18 years.

Last ones to leave the old church, which is being rented to Charles Shreve, evangelist, pending its sale, were the Rev. Mr. Newell, F. A. Biddle, and the sexton.

For the past year the congregation has been worshiping at the old site and in the new parsonage at 1804 Branch avenue southeast, but on this Sunday will begin using the first unit of their new church adjoining the parsonage. Last services were held in the latter place last night.

While not a member of Ryland Church, Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen once sang in choir and was a member of the board of trustees. His wife was a member and chorister.

Shift Forecast In British View On Bombing

Nazi Raids in Norway Bring Issue to Head, Observer Declares

By Augur

Copyright by New York Times

London, April 28.—The public and even leading politicians in Great Britain are still unconscious of the deep change that war conditions have already caused by the extension of the war to Norway.

For the moment attention is concentrated on daily military happenings, but far more important developments are on the way in the mental attitude of the nation. That importance is such that it can easily result in profound changes in domestic politics.

The nature of the military operations in the Norwegian area obliges the government to face the essential problem of aerial bombing, on solution of which the outcome of the whole struggle may depend.

Sauce for the Goose

Public opinion has long been aware that victory depended on possession of undisputed air domination, that naval supremacy was not enough. It is generally recognized that the German people will not admit defeat until Anglo-French warplanes are able to give them tangible evidence of the destructive power of bombs on military targets in their own country. Thus we come to the problem of bombing.

The warfare in Norway brought the solution of that problem much nearer. Indeed, the situation created in regard to the use of aerial bombs verges on the ridiculous and cannot continue.

The German air force carries out indiscriminate bombing of civilians, open towns and undefeated villages in Norway. It is true that the Germans had acted in a similar fashion in Poland, but military necessity required that this time the British airmen retaliate by bombing German air fields in Norway and Denmark.

Those air fields were certainly situated in civilian areas, yet apart from attacks on the exclusively military target of Sylt, the British as yet have abstained from dropping explosives on the fields of Germany proper.

What About the Gander?

Thus the impression created is that the German civilians enjoy a preferential treatment compared with the Danes and the Norwegians. Clearly such a differentiation is untenable before public opinion, intent on winning the war.

At the end of 1918, the Allies were preparing to bomb Berlin, but in 1939 the idea of causing injury to women, children and civilians generally, inspired horror, not only to Prime Minister Chamberlain and his colleagues, but to the British people.

Therefore, when Anglo-French consultations began in view of possible German aggression, one of the first things decided was that aerial bombing must be restricted to military targets and that even the latter must be spared if attack implies serious danger to civilians.

Such limitation of aerial warfare became a dogma in Chamberlain's war policy. On at least one occasion, he declined to include an extremely useful technician in the war cabinet because it was discovered the candidate was favorable to freer bombing of military targets inside Germany.

Issue Is Ripe

It may be assumed Hitler forbade raids over London when the war broke out, for he had been warned that the effect on British public opinion of such raids would be a demand for retribution. Further Heinrich Himmler warned the Fuehrer that the latter could rely implicitly on the faithfulness of the German people so long as bombs did not come to shatter their confidence in the impregnable position of the country.

Still open is the question of bombing military targets inside Germany, the Ruhr industrial area for example, which constitutes an immense arsenal.

The critical warfare in Norway has brought matters to a head.

Nazis Warn of Peril Zones Off Estonia

Copyright by New York Times

London, April 28.—Two large areas in the Gulf of Finland off the Estonian coast are designated as danger zones tonight by the German radio which, in a broadcast picked up in London, warned all German shipping not to enter them.

One zone is directly outside the Estonian port, Baltiski, which Russia leased from Estonia under the mutual assistance pact reached by the two countries a few months ago. The other zone lies just east of Kolko Bay, nearly opposite Helsinki.

forces believed to be at Storen after an early advance via Dombas, from the landing point at Andalsnes. In addition, if it is in strength, the southern column presents a severe flanking threat to Dombas and to the Allied forces southeast of Dombas.

The fronts north of Trondheim remain unchanged and only minor patrol fights are reported from that region, while snowstorms are preventing any major operations around Narvik.

Meanwhile, the Germans are rapidly extending their "pacification" action in southern Norway, where effective resistance seems to be small.

Having forced the capitulation of the Norwegian forces in the Stavanger region, in which they claim to have taken more than 3,000 prisoners, including some British fliers, they are now apparently seeking to establish contact between their main force around Oslo and the still isolated troops at Bergen. Ninety miles north of Bergen, at Laerdal, a British landing force was reported some days ago, but has not since been heard from.

According to the Norwegian communique, the Germans are now advancing northwestward along the Numedalen and Hallingdalen (valleys) from Kongsberg and Honefoss, which they occupied early in the campaign, while the Bergen troops are proceeding eastward to meet them.

Junction Aimed At

The Honefoss column apparently is moving up the Hallingdalen railway, which links Oslo and Bergen, while the Kongsberg column can follow a small railway up the Numendalen to a point about 20 miles from the Hallingdalen line at Gol, where the two columns presumably will unite before pushing westward to a junction with the Bergen forces pushing eastward. Gol is 60 mlies northwest of Nonefoss and about 140 miles east and northeast of Bergen.

Drive on British Landing

Another German column was reported pushing west from Gjovik, on Lake Mjosen opposite Hamar. It was said by Norwegian sources to have been checked between the Etnedalen and South Aurdal, about 40 miles west of Gjovik. The apparent objective of this column is the Begna River at South Aurdal, whence it could push 50 miles up the valley to Vang, only 35 miles by a mountain road from Laerdal, supposed to be one of the British landing bases.

But the key to the whole Norwegian campaign remains the continued German superiority in the air, for it permits the Germans to continue their blitzkrieg tactics, to reconnoiter the terrain, blast the way for their advance troops and bomb and machine-gun every Allied and Norwegian movement of troops and transports.

Above all, it has enabled them to neutralize Allied sea superiority in the Skagerrak and to open up their interrupted sea communications to Norway, which in turn permitted them to provide the German army in Norway with equipment far superior to both Allied and Norwegian.

According to all information here, the German air fleet has been able to keep the British navy at a distance, despite occasional raids, and German transports, convoyed by warships and planes and preceded by minesweepers, are going to Norway daily.

Nevertheless, although Norwegian resistance has been weak and Allied equipment is still inadequate, it must be kept in mind that whereas Poland was crushed in 18 days, the Allied and Norwegian forces are still holding the Germans at all decisive points and have so far prevented even the junction between the isolated German landing corps and their main force.

Sees War Inevitable

Rome, April 28 (AP).—Giovanni Ansaldo in his third declaration of the kind in as many weeks said today it is "impossible for a country like Italy to remain indefinitely out of a conflict" like the present war.

Ansaldo, editor of Foreign Minister Count Ciano's Il Telegrafo of Leghorn, spoke in a weekly broadcast to Italian troops.

Ansaldo told the troops "it is up to us more than anything to be ready for the order which will come."

Slavs to Fire on Planes

Copyright by New York Times

Belgrade, April 28.—Yugoslavia has informed the governments of Italy, Germany and Hungary that owing to frequent violations of her frontiers by airplanes, particularly between the dates of April 18 and 20, orders have been given to military authorities to fire on any further pouchers.

During the last fortnight reports have reached Belgrade of repeated flights above Slovenia by German planes, of the forced landing of a Hungarian bomber in the Voidvodina and of the flight of Italian planes over Kotor, close to the Albanian frontier.

Italians Anxious To Keep Peace, Russians Assert

Moscow, April 28 (AP).—The newspaper Trud said today events in Scandinavia have "compelled Italy to stand on guard and, therefore, the Italians are playing such a significant role in the Mediterranean trying to avoid war."

Italian circles were not alarmed over the fate of Norway, it said, but over possible "expansion of the war arena and moreover the possibility of this expansion in the direct neighborhood of Italy.

"The Scandinavian peninsula interests Italy slightly, but quite different is the question of whether, after Scandinavia, the Balkan states will not be a theater of war events. This has made Italy anxious."

Trud's article said Germany could not take a number of warplanes and ships from the central war front to the Mediterranean and, therefore, Italy, if she should fight with Germany, would have to battle both on land and sea against superior British and French forces.

ber bomb at the bow, and a third near the ship's side. A fourth transport is reported to have been hit by a medium caliber bomb as it lay alongside a quay. Where this attook took place was not revealed.

Intensification of German air attacks on Allied military convoys was explained in a semiofficial release tonight on the grounds that air forces, which until the present had been used in conjunction with operations in the region between Oslo and Trondheim, can now be spared because land operations "now represent little more than cleaning-up operations."

The supreme command's daily communique reported the air force "successfully fought British landing troops near Harstad and Andalsnes, in spite of heavy antiaircraft fire."

The communique further reported a heavy attack on transport ships in the Molde Fjord, through which ships must pass on their way to Andalsnes.

Three of these transports, with a total tonnage of 12,000 were claimed to have been sunk, while four others, with a total tonnage of 23,000 were reported "severely hit." Late last night it was announced that two transports in the Molde Fjord had been set afire. These ships are evidently included in today's communique.

Claim Success

In contrast to this alleged success in preventing the reinforcement of the Allied troops in Norway, the Germans cited their own efforts to strengthen their foothold in Norway. These efforts they claim have succeeded. Just as much as the enemy's efforts have failed.

Reporters here have no first hand way of judging the accuracy of such claims, since they are not permitted to go near the scene of action. However, it is true that the Germans have certain very definite strategic advantages in the race to pour men and materials into Norway.

Of primary importance is the fact that their air bases in southern Norway and northern Denmark give their planes an advantage both over the British planes, which have several hundreds of miles of sea to cross, and over enemy naval units attacking German transports in the Skagerrak and Kattegat, and convoying their own transports to Andalsnes and Namsos.

On the other hand, it should be pointed out that in spite of their sweeping claims, the Germans have never denied—t hough they have never admitted it—that the losses suffered by their transports have been considerable. They have admitted that considerable bodies of Allied troops have been landed in Norway, but they continue to express the conviction that these troops are not and will not be sufficient to render effective aid to Norway.

In the course of the "cleaning up operations" on the land, it was announced that the enemy was thrown back wherever troops tried to halt the German advance.

Take More Prisoners

British prisoners continued to fall into German hands, the high command said, including a British colonel in command of the Leicester Regiment. The british officer was identified by D. N. B. as a "colonel German."

In the Stavanger sector below Haugesund and Bergen, the high command asserted, 241 officers have been taken prisoners, including several British air force pilots, and 2,921 men.

In addition, it was claimed, the Germans captured 22 cannon and 267 machine guns and took control of all the coastal batteries of the Stavanger sector.

Tell of Surprise Attacks

Berlin, April 28 (AP).—Low-flying German warplanes inland, D. N. B. reported today, surprised Allied infantry in the Dombas area, southeast of Andalsnes, and carried out "especially numerous attacks" on railroad lines there.

"Countless prisoners were taken," it was asserted.

The agency said the attacks, sudden and heavy, were concentrated on roads previously made hazardous by the destruction of bridges. D. N. B. was unable to identify the nationality of Allied forces in this zone, but the propaganda ministry "assumed" they "were both British and Norwegian."

British Land More Troops At Andalsnes

there has been a lot of talk here about the troops being sent to Norwa ytoo soon, without sufficient artillery, and without adequate fighter and antiaircraft reinforcements. This criticism took a sharper turn today when the government's critics started expressing their opinions in the Sunday papers.

As usual the loudest of these critics was David Lloyd George, who from the shadows of his political eclipse, is still able, as the premier who won the last war, to get the country's ear.

"Ill Equipped," He Says

Though he admits it is quite a feat to land at all in the narrow fjords where there is little opportunity to get tanks and other heavy mechanized equipment ashore, Lloyd George is critical of the ways and the condition in which the troops were sent into battle. The war offices' "fatuous explanations," he says, "do not hide the fact that Allied flying columns were ill-equipped for the task entrusted to them.

"They were rushed headlong to the battlefront without artillery, armored cars, or tanks, and with practically no effective protection from aerial attack. When Parliament meets this week there will be some angry criticism of the war leadership."

Leslie Hore-Belisha, too, writing in The News of The World, gives credit to those who shouldered the liability and effected the British landings, but like Lloyd George, he wants to see more men and more equipment sent to Norway immediately.

Bold Action Demanded

"It becomes," he says, "more and more imperative that with accelerated speed and on a comprehensive scale, reinforcements of men and material should be hastened to the fighting zones" and above all, he urges the Allies should reinforce the Narvik garrison, in order to be in a position to help protect Sweden's iron ore mines of Kiruna, if and when the Nazis attack the Swedes.

Elsewhere dissatisfaction with the Norwegian campaign takes the form of suggestions for bold swift action against Trondheim. Tomorrow's Chronicle is asking "is the hope of a successful raid on the Trondheim Fjord an idle dream?"

The audacity and determination of the services is undoubted, the News Chronicle says, addnig "what is essential is proof of equal audacity and determination in Downing Street.

Papers Explain

London, April 28 (AP).—British newspapers today generally sought to cushion the impact of Allied "withdrawals" of the last week by showing what the British, French and Norwegian forces are up against.

"We had no reason to hope for spectacular success in this campaign," said the Sunday Dispatch. "Our task from the beginning was to recover lost ground."

The Sunday Express, urging Britons to "keep your balance," said:

"We have become overelated by good news and overdepressed by bad news. It is the duty of all of us to survey in our minds the whole sweep of the war, rather than to fix our gaze on the tiny corners of that smoking landscape."

Chamberlain May Speak

Prime Minister Chamberlain may say something about the Norwegian campaign in the House of Commons on Tuesday.

The Daily Mail said Chamberlain would be "faced with the necessity of making a full statement" on the Norwegian campaign and that "in certain circumstances members of Parliament may demand an immediate secret session" for a frank discussion of the war efforts.

The Daily Mail's dilomatic correspondent wrote:

"Rumors regarding a reverse suffered by a comaratively small force of British troos north of Trondheim last week have had repercussions in political circles.

"There have been numerous consultations among leading politicians during the week-end, and much will depend on the prime minister's statement."

Merchantmen Of Germany Rule Danube

French Colors Vanish, British Ships Idle; Nazis Crowd Ports

By Eugen Kovacs

Braila, Rumania, April 28.—The Germans today dominate the Danube.

Along the whole length of the river from Sulina to Turnu Severin, that is to say from the Black Sea to the frontier of the Rumanian Danube, the German colors predominate. With few exceptions, all the international traffic is German. The Danubian ports are packed with German tugs, barges and tankers and German agents fill the harbors. And they not only dominate the business traffic in Galatz, Braila and Turnu Severin but keep watch on the security of the river.

The French colors have totally disappeared from this international artery. The S. F. N. D., the French Danubian navigation company, has transferred its large barge and tug base to Istanbul. The large French cereal export firm of Dreyfus & Co. has moved its barges to Sulina to be nearer the Turkish port.

British Ships Idle

The British still keep their merchant fleet on the Danube but only in the ports of Macin and Ghecet and these boats, with the exception of those which took part in the unfortunate excursion at Giurgiu and were forced to return, are idle and will probably remain so.

Braila is the center of the cereal trade, and since the ban on exports of barley, oats and wheat, trading has fallen almost entirely on corn. The Germans, however, do not buy this commodity, most of which is shipped to Italy. For the time being, the wheat the Germans bought on contracts which are allowed to be filled is still being loaded in this port as well as soya beans and sunflower and other vegetable oil seeds.

Some seven German firms control almost all the traffic and the German consul is extremely busy. Galatz, only half an hour away by train, is the timber center. The goods on the Danube are all going to Germany. Larger transactions are only held up through the shortage of rail cars.

Allies Desert Market

Braila and Galatz are also important loading harbors for sea traffic, but now merchants there are complaining that the British and French are not buying, that they have deserted in favor of the Germans.

The French have entirely disappeared from the market. The British do some business but only reluctantly and the only trade with them is in the form of timber exports to Syria, Palestine and Egypt, with which countries the Rumanian State Navigation Company's boats, as well as two or three Egyptian freighters and two others flying the Panama colors, carry on a regular traffic. Large exports of cellulose woods are now being shipped to Italy—not probably for manufacturing paper but for making nitro-cellulose.

Ports in Nazi

Braila and Galatz, as well as all the other upstream Danube ports, are in the hands of the Germans. The measures taken by the Rumanian government for the safety of navigation are aimed at insuring peaceful traffic.

Experts in Braila say that in spite of all these orders it would not be difficult at any time to block up the Iron Gate. But they also say that the blocking up by sinking ships and blasting would only close traffic temporarily. The only obstacle hindering Danube navigation right now is the high water level, which makes loading difficult.

The Germans are far better off today than they were last fall, as they have brought in a new lot of motor tankers. They will not need foreign barges for cereal deliveries, which are practically completed for the present, until the new harvest.

Shakespeare Was No Modern Briton, Germans Decide

Berlin, April 28.—The works of William Shakespeare will survive the present war without having to undergo the disgrace of being identified by the Germans with present-day England.

The German Shakespeare Association has decided that "Shakespeare was no spiritual companion of present-day British plutocracy," so his works can continue to be identified with the German spirit.

Prof. Wolfgang Keller also proved to the satisfaction of a meeting of the association here that Shakespeare was no friend of the French. Several of his plays, Keller declared, show that Shakespeare regarded the French as "false, big-mouthed, frivolous and tricky—in short, he did not like them."

Canada Compels Workers to Save

Ottawa, April 28.—With the idea of providing quick resources for some 4,000 to 5,000 temporary civil servants who will be thrown out of jobs when the war ends the Canadian government is putting into effect a compulsory saving plan for them which it hopes private business will imitate.

Every temporary civil servant engaged since September 1, will have 5 per cent of his or her salary withheld by the government. Interest on the accumulation will be allowed at the rate of 4 per cent and interest plus principal will be handed over in a lump sum when the job ends. The deduction will go into effect on May 1.

Hungarian Police Keep an Eye On Ascetic Nazi Ex-Premier

Imredy, 100-Pound Fanatic, Is Watched As a 'Trojan Horse'

[Lajos Rethy, a Hungarian who is well acquainted with political trends in that country and, who recently arrived in the United States, discusses in this article the Nazi "Fifth Column" in Hungary. —Editor's note.]

By Lajos Rethy.

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, April 28.—Hungary's destiny, if Adolf Hitler decides to pounce on the Balkans, is already clearly outlined.

After the sudden invasion of Denmark and Norway, even skeptics in Hungary no longer doubt that their country will be only a crumb to appease the appetite of the insatiable Teutons.

The invasion of Hungary would not count as a surprising success for the Nazi military machine to those who know how this little country is undermined and demoralized by the "fifth column" of the Third Reich. In the last few weeks, because of rumors of an early German move through Hungary to the Balkans, Hungarian police have checked the status of thousands of German "tourists" and found that most of them are agents of the Gestapo (German secret police) or of other Nazi political organizations.

At the same time police kept an eye on Hungary's former premier, Bela Imredy, who is believed intended by Berlin to be the Magyar counterpart of Arthur Seyss-Inquart, the man who sold out Austria to the Nazis. The ascetic-looking, fanatic-eyed Imredy is one example of the almost always contradictory Nazi ideology.

Now 49 years old, Imredy resigned as premier on February 15, 1939, after he learned that his great-grandfather and grandmother were Jews. Yet he remained a fierce propagandist for Nazi doctrines.

A great admirer and friend of Hitler, he is in many respects very similar to him, but in his outward appearance he reminds me of Mohandas Gandhi. Like Hitler, he is obsessed with the idea that he is destined for the role of a fuehrer.

Imredy weighs only 100 pounds. He subsists on bread and raw vegetables, is a total abstainer from alcohol and tobacco. Like his ideal, Hitler, he is wont to go into seclusion before making any important decision.

An article three weeks ago in Uj Magyarsay, the organ of the Hungarian Nazis, said that Hungary's only role was to be subservient to Germany and that all those who opposed this role were traitors to their country. This same goal has caused Imredy to enlist the Hungarian Nazis in organizing a putsch to overthrow the government and pave the way for an unresisted Nazi invasion.

Defense Inundation Wouldn't Reach Ex-Ruler's Castle

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Doorn, Holland, April 28.—If at dawn some morning the Dutch are forced to open their dikes in the face of a swift invasion from the east, the former Kaiser, Wilhelm II, Germany's supreme war lord a quarter of a century ago, will be among the fortunate section of the population of the Netherlands not forced to flee high waters.

His estate is on the borders of this town, 10 miles southeast of Utrecht, on relatively high ground, between two extensive areas designated for inundation.

Nevertheless, like almost everyone else in the country, the last of the Hohenzollerns to rule is directly affected by the elaborate preparations the Dutch have made to meet the legions of the present supreme war lord, if they come. The military are encroaching on the exiled sovereign's miniature domain and, of course, if it comes to a fight, he may be forced by gun fire, if not by water, to change his residence.

View Cleared

Though scattered widely in no order apparent to the eye of the laymen hastily constructed defense works of earth, sand, concrete and steel are thickest on the western fringes of the districts to be inundated. Where the view eastward through the peepholes of these steel fortifications was obstructed by trees, the trees have been cut down. Many of them are lying today where they were felled.

Houses and other buildings in the prospective line of fire—eastward over the districts to be flooded—are to be dynamited immediately when the signal comes. Nothing is to obscure the aim of the machine gunners and artilleryists in the defense works, if the time comes for them to meet an enemy attempting to advance across the water covered fields.

Contrary to a widespread view, the flood with which the Dutch threaten to cover much of their land—some flooding has been carried on already—will be decidedly shallow.

"The Dutch engineers," an expert said, "consider between 9 and 16 inches to be the most suitable depth, as such water can hardly be waded through or navigated effectively.

Canals Would Be Traps

"And don't forget that in the districts affected, the bewildering maze of small canals would sink wholly from view, to become an equally bewildering maze of booby traps for an invader."

Observers differ, of course, as to what the Dutch would be able to do in defense in case of an invasion. The German air force would be a formidable factor to contend with but, unlike the air warfare in Poland, that of Holland would not be a one-sided affair; both British and French air squadrons would be at hand.

Restrictions Eased On Czech Jews

Copyright by New York Times

Prague, April 28.—An extension of the curfew hour for Jews in the protectorate from 8 to 9 o'clock in the evening has been permitted by the German Gestapo authorities following the introduction of daylight saving time. Another decree issued by Reich's Protector Baron Constantin von Neurath, brings some easements in the strictly supervised financial life of the Jews.

All funds sent them from foreign nations can now be converted into their full value in Czech crowns.

Hitherto such funds had to be paid to the special account from which were released only up to a maximum amount of 1,500 crowns monthly. This decree, like most anti-Jewish laws in the protectorate, is modeled after one already in effect in the Reich.

Dutch Have a Word for Traitors—'Quislings'

By Beach Conger.

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Amsterdam, April 28.—Holland, like other neutral European nations, is becoming concerned about the existence of a "fifth column" or "quislings" within its borders.

Although it has not been necessary to adopt such special regulations affecting foreigners and local Nazis as have been reported in the Balkans, nevertheless, the local press in the last week has been stressing the existence of groups which it considers hostile to the independence of the nation.

One of the most interesting developments here since the German invasion of Norway has been the use of the word "quisling"—after Vidkun Quisling, the Norwegian Nazi, who attempted to assume power after the German invasion—as equivalent to "traitor."

The names of Arthur Seyss-Inquart, who opened the path to German anschluss with Austria, and Otto Kuusinen, who sought to do the same for Russia and Finland, never achieved such general usage in this connection.

The dignified Times of London even used the Norwegian's name as a verb the other day; "to quisling" has a fascinating quality when used contemptuously, which probably accounts for its general use.

The military correspondent of the Amsterdam Telegraf pointed out recently that in the World War Dutch as well as Belgian citizens served the Germans for purely monetary reasons. But in the present war, he explained, the citizens are not looking for financial rewards but for power within their own countries.

Theoretically, he continued, Holland might fear this desire for political power from adherents of all belligerents. But, he explained, pro-Allied Dutchmen would never be asked by Great Britain or France to start a movement against the present government because the Allied powers favor the continuance of an independent Holland.

The ominous meaning of the word, Quisling, was further stressed this week in an article in the Socialist paper, Het Volk.

This article was a rewritten version of a story which appeared at the time of an International Fascist congress held here in March, 1935. Among those who attended the meeting, according to the story published in the newspaper this week, were Quisling and the leader of the Dutch Nazis, Anton Mussert; the presence of these two was particularly stressed.

The state of siege which was proclaimed in the Netherlands last week is generally regarded as directed primarily against such groups as the Dutch Nazis and Communists. The military powers of censorship proclaimed Thursday will give the army the right to suppress any publication and in some circles it is considered very likely that the local Nazi newspapers will be banned.

Urges Rumania Recall Expatriates

Copyright by New York Times

Bucharest, April 28.—The suggestion has been put forward by Victor Jinga, former undersecretary of state, that the 1,200,000 to 1,500,000 Rumanians now living abroad be called back to the fatherland.

According to Jinga, 350,000 are in Soviet Russia, 280,000 in Yugoslavia, 60,000 in the Ukraine, 60,000 in Bulgaria, 200,000 in Greece, 40,000 in Albania, 50,000 in Hungary, 15,000 in former Czecho-Slovakia and about 200,000 in other countries.

They would be colonized principally in the Dobruja and on the stretches of land from Satu-Mare to the River Muresh, and from that river to the Danube.

UNQUESTIONABLE FACTS!

AND NOW A NATIONALLY KNOWN TESTING ORGANIZATION

...proves Nu-Blue Sunoco

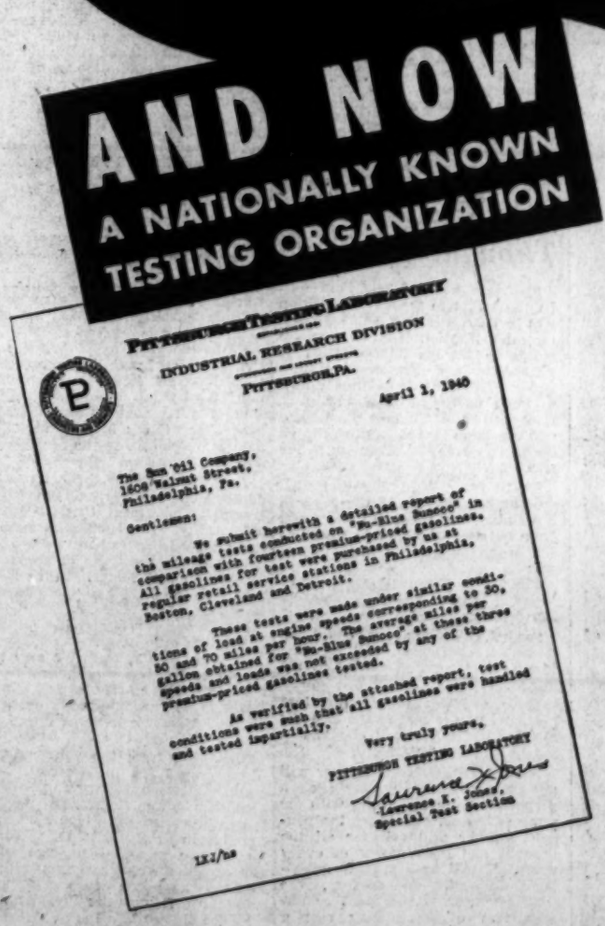
in scientific tests against 14 leading extra priced gasolines



PITTSBURGH TESTING LABORATORY

The Sun Oil Company,
1608 Walnut Street,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Gentlemen:

We submit herewith a detailed report of the mileage tests conducted on "Nu-Blue Sunoco" in comparison with fourteen premium-priced gasolines. All gasolines for test were purchased by us at regular retail service stations in Philadelphia, Boston, Cleveland and Detroit.

These tests were made under similar conditions of load at engine speeds corresponding to 30, 50 and 70 miles per hour. The average miles per gallon obtained for "Nu-Blue Sunoco" at these three speeds and loads was not exceeded by any of the premium-priced gasolines tested.

As verified by the attached report, test conditions were such that all gasolines were handled and tested impartially.

Very truly yours,
Lawrence K. Jones,
Special Test Section

LKJ/hs

These tests, completed March 27, 1940, by the Pittsburgh Testing Laboratory, were made to cover different driving speeds: low, medium and high. Regardless of speed, Nu-Blue Sunoco was unsurpassed in miles per gallon; and since it sells at regular gas price, Nu-Blue Sunoco gave more miles per dollar.

To make a fair test, don't dilute Nu-Blue Sunoco with other gasoline. Instead—for best results—let your tank run practically empty. Then put in Nu-Blue Sunoco. Compare it against any gasoline at any price, and particularly against extra priced fuels. ... We'll rest our case on your findings.

Unprepared Norway

German units operating out of Elverum in southeastern Norway late last week are reported to have advanced 50 miles in 24 hours, although part of their route was over snow-covered mountain passes up to 3,000 feet in height.

How many men were employed in this action is not known. Nor is it at all certain that the Germans will be able to hold the gains they won by this sudden and brilliant maneuver. That will depend largely on whether the Allies can rush reinforcements and badly needed supplies, particularly artillery and anti-aircraft guns, to the new front.

But, regardless of its ultimate outcome, the German army's northward thrust up the Oester Valley to a point beyond Roeros is another eloquent reminder of Norway's utter unpreparedness for the German invasion.

The mountain passes over which the Germans are taking tanks and armored cars, says Otto D. Tolischus in a dispatch published Sunday in The Post, "are natural fortresses, which could easily be blocked and just as easily defended." In many places, he adds, "they are only a few feet wide, with towering mountains on one side and steep precipices on the other, and with turns so sharp that automobiles must back up against the unprotected precipices to take them."

It is obvious, therefore, that the sudden and spectacular German thrust to the north was wholly uncontested. Confronted by an enemy which is infinitely better armed, the Norwegian troops for all their bravery, have proved inadequate to the task before them. There are obviously not enough of them, even counting Allied reinforcements, to cover every possible German avenue of advance. Equipped for the most part only with rifles, they have been no match for the mechanized units of the invaders.

No doubt it was this very Norwegian unpreparedness which encouraged Hitler to embark on his latest aggression and enabled him to employ "fifth column" tactics with success. Had the Norwegians been better prepared they could have made their country an all but impregnable fortress, vulnerable only to large-scale and expensive operations.

But Norway had for many decades enjoyed the deep dream of peace. She felt herself safe behind the barrier of an impeccable neutrality. Her people are now eating the bitter bread of disillusion.

Yet, weak as they have proved to be in a military sense, there is no weakness in their moral fiber. Being free men they are fighting, however great the original odds against them, to protect their homes, their institutions and their freedom.

Conflicting Obligations

It may be that the Smith committee investigating the National Labor Relations Board is selecting its evidence with the object of influencing the action of the House when the amendments affecting the NLRB come to a vote. Even so, its recent findings are likely to strengthen the demand for separation of the prosecuting and judicial functions.

What is needed most of all in the administration of a controversial statute involving human rights and interests is an expert, independent and judicial-minded board to hear the facts and determine whether the law has been violated. Undoubtedly the NLRB has tried to measure up to this requirement. But it has been handicapped by the fact that it is a prosecutor as well as a judge. No organization can switch suddenly from one role to another, and when it tries to play both at the same time the result is certain to be unsatisfactory.

If a prosecutor reported to a separate and independent board that the case he was submitting was debatable as to facts but that the C. I. O. had made it a cause celebre, the board would be immediately on guard against an abuse of the prosecution power. But in the case explored by the Smith committee this advice came from one of the board's own regional directors. That board is responsible for this type of prosecution as well as for the passing of judgment upon cases thus presented.

It is not to be supposed that so basic a weakness in the present organization can be overcome by the relatively minor adjustments advocated by the House Labor Committee. If the House wishes to grapple with the central problem that emerges from the experience of the NLRB, it will concentrate its attention upon the Smith committee proposal to relieve the board of prosecution duties and enhance its standing as a quasi-judicial agency.

Land Banks Imperiled

Speaking at St. Paul before a mass meeting of farmers, Secretary Wallace struck back at critics of the Farm Credit Administration now under his control. The opposition, he charges, includes the "same financial, journalistic and political interests which always gang up against anything which really will help the farmer."

As a matter of fact, the really effective opposition to the new regime has come from experienced officials of the formerly independent FCA. These men had hoped to build up a sound system of cooperative credit—a system that would eventually be entirely owned and managed by farmers and capable of functioning without reliance upon Government subsidies.

It is true, as Secretary Wallace says, that a large percentage of the loans held by the Federal Land Banks are delinquent and that many of the national farm loan associations have badly impaired capital structures. The prolonged agricultural depression has played havoc with the farm credit system built up during the twenties. But much of the wreckage has been cleared away, or is gradually disappearing. Mortgage loans have been refinanced to relieve necessitous borrowers, and the Land Banks have been slowly strengthening their position.

The fact that the banks have recently been able to sell their own unguaranteed obligations to private investors on a yield basis comparing favorably with that of United States bonds is a tribute to the type of management which was in control of the independent FCA.

Secretary Wallace advocates a scaling of interest rates on Land Bank loans to farmers down to at least 3½ per cent, regardless of the borrower's ability to pay. In thus cutting down the income due to the Land Banks under loan contracts, the solvency of the system would be impaired, unless the Federal Treasury should continue to pay the difference between the contract rate and the reduced rate. That has been done under a temporary arrangement, by special act of Congress for a number of years.

Government guarantees of Land Bank bonds are also urged by Mr. Wallace. Such guarantees would be essential under his plan since it would be impossible for these banks to obtain needed funds from private investors. With these obligations guaranteed, the Land Banks would also be under less pressure from private investors to pursue sound credit policies. Mr. Wallace would no longer require farmer-borrowers, through their national farm loan associations, to invest in Land Bank stock. The Land Banks, he said, have never been true cooperatives and the Government probably never will be willing to give farmers control of the system, for which it has provided "the huge part of the capital." He did not mention, however, that farmer groups now own over $100,000,000 of stock of the Land Banks. Nor did he refer to the progress that has been made in reviving interest in the cooperative aspects of the system.

One suspects that Mr. Wallace's skepticism as to the possibility of establishing a genuinely cooperative system of farm credit grows out of a strong desire to use the Land Banks in ways that would not be possible if they were under control of farmer-owners interested in preserving their solvency. He gave himself away when he exclaimed: "What a mighty team Farm Credit and the Triple-A can be if they pull together steadily for conservation of the soil, stability of farm communities and increase in farm income."

This appears to be a tacit confession that the Secretary of Agriculture wishes to use the farm credit system to further the Administration's crop-control policy. Those who have predicted disaster for the Land Bank system under its new management will probably find full justification for their fears in the St. Paul speech.

A Good Compromise

For some time Commissioner McCoach has been trying to secure action on a plan to save money for District taxpayers by floating a local bond issue and using the proceeds to pay off a PWA loan of nearly $10,000,000. As that loan carries an interest rate of 4 per cent, while the District could probably borrow at 2 per cent, the proposal would mean a considerable reduction in loan charges. However, the Commissioners are powerless to act without Congressional approval, and the legislative draft of the plan, presented to the Budget Bureau some months ago, remains there.

President Roosevelt has now suggested another method by which the District may obtain the benefit of the lower borrowing rate without special legislation. He is evidently prepared to approve a change in the terms of the PWA contract which would give the District the benefit of the lower rate warranted by its high credit standing. By such means and through a reduction in the length of time for repaying the loan, it is estimated that $3,500,000 in interest can be saved.

The President objects to a local bond issue on the ground that it might mean abandonment of the pay-as-you-go policy in force since 1891. That seems a rather far-fetched argument since the District is already in debt to a Federal agency. However, there is force in the contention that a District bond issue might set an undesirable precedent.

The President's suggestion appears to provide a very satisfactory alternative to the Commissioners' plan. And it has the further advantage of not requiring the approval of Congress.

Fires In The Sun

While statesmen seek ways and means of stopping conflagrations which threaten to destroy the earth, a group of scientists are quietly analyzing the forces which keep the sun burning. Their findings receive scant attention today. But it is quite possible that they will be remembered when the invasion of Norway and the frightfulness of war in 1940 have been forgotten.

Science has been much criticized in recent years for its aloofness. Politicians, editors and statesmen have invited the scientists to come down from their ivory tower and help to make the world a better place in which to live. Many scientists have responded. They are becoming increasingly concerned over the uses to which scientific discoveries are put. Some are now as eager to direct the consequences of research into constructive channels as to continue the research itself.

Yet there is something admirable about the detachment with which Prof. Hans Bethe and Dr. M. G. Holloway have pursued their experiments designed to solve the mystery of the sun. While nations have perished they have kept their attention fixed on atoms in the sun. Now it appears that they, with the aid of other scientists, have demonstrated in the laboratory all the six processes by which the sun is believed to release its seemingly inexhaustible supply of atomic energy.

Scientists have long inquired why the sun is not consumed by its intense fires that give light and heat to the earth and other planets. It has been assumed that the sun makes use of its enormous atomic energy. An explanation of this process was worked out by Prof. Bethe in 1938. He concluded that, through a series of atomic reactions, the sun is able to consume its carbon and, after a long cycle of years, restore it for further use. Now the steps by which this may be done have been actually demonstrated and they seem to conform to known facts about radiation on the sun.

These experiments do not mean, of course, that the atom may now be forced to yield its boundless store of energy under conditions prevailing on the earth. They may not put a single dollar into the pocket of any one. But they do suggest that man is making remarkable progress in solving the mysteries of his environment. The limits of human knowledge are being pushed outward in a striking fashion.

It is all the more ironic that men who are coming to understand the fires of the sun separated from us by an incomprehensible distance of space, cannot quench the fires of war that threaten their own lives, homes and cities. It may be that some day Prof. Bethe's experiments will overshadow the human destruction on which our attention is now concentrated. But if that day is to come the thorny problem of human relationships will certainly have to be given the type of intelligent study now devoted to our physical environment.

"The average person's speaking vocabulary is less han 3,000 words," declares an educator. Still, that's ample for talking about the weather, kinsfolk, neighbors, and petty personal affairs.

No More Horse Thieves

From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

The Gumbo (Mo.) Protective Association has gone out of business, and thus is recorded another sign of our swiftly changing times. It was a vigilante group organized in 1906 to war on horse thieves, which may have a humorous connotation today, but was serious business in all rural districts only a generation or so ago.

For the horse thief was an enemy of society whose counterpart does not exist today. An auto thief is a gentleman compared with that frontier felon, to whom no milder epithet than "ornery skunk" was ever applied. The horse, in an earlier agrarian America, was the mainstay for field labor, transport and communication. Its theft meant not only financial loss, but isolation for a family and almost the equivalent of a dear friend's abduction. Law-enforcement authorities were necessarily slow-moving, so farmers united for self-protection. And it was not surprising if sometimes they dealt out rough justice when the galloping posse overhauled the criminal.

Of late years, wherever antihorse thief groups survived, they were purely social groups. A rousing chase after that prime villain of frontier balladry, the "dirty hoss thief," is rare today, so the Gumbo farmers, with a motorized highway patrol to keep their autos and tractors secure, decide to disband.

Hitler Vs. Stalin

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: "Now watch Russia change her course to the dismay of Germany!" This came out of my radio as I turned on the news. It came with enthusiastic emphasis from the same announcer who a short time ago was repeating with the fervor of a litanist the multiplied stories of a Russian debacle in Finland.

In The Post, we get the carefully weighed advice from Walter Lippmann that the Soviet government is not helping Germany—is opposed to helping Germany. A fresh dispatch from Europe brings an alleged Soviet announcement that Russia will help to defend Sweden in the event of Hitler's invasion of that kingdom.

I have pointed out often in the past that Stalin's every move has been in the interest of Soviet Russia and none other, and an absolute challenge to "Mein Kampf."

If Der Fuehrer goes into Sweden now, out of schedule, it will signal either desperation of the cornered quarry or incaution of the gambler.

Josef Stalin's recent coincidental advance into Poland was not to help Adolf Hitler. While the latter had his hands full, the former's incursion to the Baltic was a checkmate. When things get lively down Rumania way the chief commissar will not be singing Deutchland Ueber Alles.

In appraising these two geniuses, I would rate the melancholy Austrian simply as a Hitlerphile, while the parallelepiped Georgian seems to be a genuine Russian Socialist.

Lay your money for the coming Armageddon in Scandinavia. And, if you are not as confused as the mixed metaphors, note that Adolf will not be riding the Muscovite.

Showing Spirit

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For many years, the citizens of the District of Columbia have been denied the privilege of suffrage, while at the same time they have been and still are paying taxes. The officials of our city are appointed by the President of the United States, who is elected by citizens of the States, and many of our executives are residents of other States, thus depriving citizens of the District of Columbia of the jobs of running their own government.

The injustice of not being allowed to vote is so deplorable that a civil hearted American citizen can just barely exist in the District.

Since we have taxation and no representation, which is unfair, suppose we stop paying taxes; one injustice of this nature is just as bad as another. There are approximately 100,000 property hbiders in the District, and it would be quite impossible to evict that many people from their homes. And suppose about 100,000 citizens divided themselves in half, and one group blocked the entrances of the House of Representatives and the other the Senate until they decided to grant suffrage, then we would at least be showing spirit.

Thoughts On The Election

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the last two weeks the primaries in Wisconsin and Nebraska and the intensification of military movements in Europe have seemed to crystallize the Presidential campaign. The candidates appear now to have narrowed to Franklin D. Roosevelt and Thomas E. Dewey and the issue to keeping the United States free from involvement in the war.

That's fine. Assuming that such are the candidates and the issue in November, the American voter will have but two questions to ask himself when he goes to the polls, to wit:

First, "Do I want to cast my vote to send more American boys to European battlefields?"

Second. "Which of the candidates, Roosevelt or Dewey, will be most likely, if elected, to carry out my desire?"

It is needless to observe that probably 99 per cent of the answers to the first query will be "no"—firmly and unhesitatingly.

Naturally, the second answer will not be arrived at by any such a preponderant majority, nor with the same swiftness. To select the prudent answer will call for all the thought and discernment of every voter. It will be a gravely important decision. In surgery, the slightest error of judgment or unsteadiness of hand may cost a human life. In the election, an error in judgment may cost many hundreds of thousands of human lives.

From where we sit, it would appear today that most Americans are suspicious of the President's motives and that the election would go to Dewey. We can be permitted to believe that the same ambition which would lead Franklin Roosevelt to seek a third term may cause him to seek supremacy on the stage of world power politics. Inherently and temperamentally he seems too much a fighter to rest in contentment as a peacetime President in a war-torn world. Notwithstanding his smiling visage, his every act and nature imply belligerence.

He has declared more than 65 national "crises" and "emergencies" since March 4, 1933. He is holding the Nation today under the suspension of a "limited national emergency." So fond a lover of national fire alarms can hardly be considered a peaceful person.

As President he has broken precedent upon precedent, apparently gleeful at possessing that questionable ability. To his enemies he has sounded warning upon warning—hardly once in defense of an ideal but always in defiance. In his own words of 1936, he has "just begun to fight."

Mr. Dewey is a fighter too, but he has fought quietly, forcefully, effectively, to crush crime. We may be led to believe he would, as President, fight just as quietly and effectively to prevent America's participation in the international crime of war.

Moreover, from the very nature of party politics in America, the mantle of peace does rest upon the shoulders of the Republican Party. It can be called the peace bloc. A Republican President may confidently be expected to recognize and accept a greater responsibility to keep the peace of America intact than a Democratic President.

In the Democratic Party, Wilson set the example—if not intentionally, then certainly in fact—of gaining reelection on a platform of "he kept us out of war," only to sign a declaration of war one short month after his reestablishment in the White House.

It must be evident that that one performance of Wilson's may sometime serve as a convenient excuse to the Democrats, but it will stand forever to the Republicans as a challenge.

Trade Agreements

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: By a small margin of 5 votes the Senate has passed the most controversial piece of legislation that this session of Congress had to deal with. In extending for three more years the power of the Executive to negotiate additional reciprocal trade agreements, the Administration scored a notable victory.

Defending the trade pacts program under the Repicrocal Tariff Act in the current issue of Forum, Mr. Hull stated: "It was obvious that our foreign trade could be restored only through a reduction of these excessive barriers here and abroad. The best possible manner of accomplishing this was to negotiate mutually beneficial trade agreements with individual countries, based on reciprocal reduction of excessive trade barriers."

Secretary Hull has already 22 such agreements to his credit, and the figures covering export-import trade with the countries to which they apply have demonstrated that the benefits derived therefrom are not only of a pecuniary character, but have also served to defeat the spread of barter trade on the part of totalitarian economies, especially in Latin America.

In spite of the fact that he voted to renew the Administration's powers, Senator Walsh believes that unemployment has increased because of the trade agreements—he may have been thinking of the Massachusetts shoe industry. I am afraid, however, that his conclusion would be difficult to substantiate statistically.

Last January the National Economic League voted "88 per cent in favor of the principle of the reciprocal trade agreements." If industry is behind this program, it is undoubtedly because industrial output has been spurred owing to a greater export demand, therefore employment would tend to rise rather than slacken. And with larger factory pay rolls, agriculture also enjoys a wider market at home.

I should like to point out that this country's national income, in the past, at least, has always been highest when the volume of our merchandise exports was greatest. Inasmuch as the barriers to which Mr. Hull alludes in the article quoted cannot be removed except by negotiating commercial treaties with foreign countries whereby both parties agree to lower duties correspondingly, and since the machinery set up for doing so is exceedingly complicated, it stands to reason that the power conferred by the Congress on the Executive and delegated to the Secretary of State does not infringe our basic liberties as has been alleged.

Silence Is Golden

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It is said that once a week Mahatma Gandhi maintains silence throughout the day and never deviates from this policy. Even when arrested, and his wife and friends wept, the East Indian stoic remained quiet and unmoved. He found security in silence.

Why do not people in general, including politicians, recognize the value of occasional silence? Long-winded, garrulous lawmakers are already busying themselves hurling vocal mud balls at their opponents and, in so doing, losing what little prestige they may have. It would seem advisable for some of them, at least, to recall the wise words of Abraham Lincoln, "Better remain silent and be thought a fool than to speak and remove all doubt."

The Post Impressionist

Birthday

Cordelia MacIntosh leaned forward intensely and abruptly, as she did everything, and scrutinized her face in its minutest detail. She took it head-on; then turned stealthily to right and left in an effort to get a better view of her profiles in the side mirrors of her dressing table.

She could detect no very noticeable change from her appearance of the day before, and the day before that. Yet today she was a whole year older than she was then. She would never, she told herself with grim finality, be as young again, even if you could call her former age really young.

She sighed tremulously and resumed brushing her hair with the long, sweeping strokes that she had found most effective for preserving its vitality.

Her hair always had been a problem, and she examined it in turn and anew with anxious appraisal. Of late, she was certain, its former luster had begun to tarnish. It had seemed to assume a tinge more nearly related to carrots than to gold.

And there was, besides, the question of changing its "do." Was it in good taste for a person who had so definitely grown older, to affect the careless, fly-away style of the extremely young? Should she not, rather, have it done up more simply, so that it would suggest the dignity and responsibility of one who had put away childish things?

But here, again, she found it difficult to make up her mind, alone and unadvised as she was. Alone? Of course there were her aged parents. But they scarcely seemed any longer to belong to her world. They had got so very old that it was doubtful whether they knew one birthday from another—even if they had not forgotten completely how old they really were.

At any rate these crucial milestones—those that clearly and definitely marked off one's light-hearted youth from the period of disillusioned maturity, and brought home those at first microscopic changes in one's very self that told of the onward stride of Father Time—these revealing and sobering occasions were no longer for them. They were old with an incredible antiquity. They no longer even tried to conceal their wrinkles!

She gave a quick shiver and jerked forward to her mirrors again, stroking with anxious fingers her cheeks and chin, and examining intently the skin about her lips and eyes.

At last she leaned back with a sigh that was expressive almost of content. That worry, at least for now, need not be one of hers, either. But she faced her other self, there in the mirror, in brooding contemplation. It still was true that she was alone, especially at this moment. There was none to tell her so that she could believe them truly, whether she seemed still the same as ever, or whether there were some changes in the years that made her—whether less or more desirable—at any rate different; so that she was no longer the same person whose charms had lured a score of males, although none so far had committed himself as being for her alone.

The last thought led to a new worry. Would she ever marry? Or would she find herself always going through life alone, a prey to her own thoughts, the solitary confidante of her own troubles and ambitions?

To date, she realized unhappily, no one had succeeded in understanding her. In fact she hardly understood herself. And unless there should come a male who could, there was every likelihood that she would continue in her present unmarried state. Although she hoped desperately that she would not become a soured, neurotic type of person like a spinster aunt or two she could name—prehistoric creatures, even older than her own parents.

"But there must be someone!" she told herself fiercely, and resumed with short, savage strokes, the effort to burnish her hair. "There's Dick, and Frederick, and Lowell, and Louis—they all come to see me now. Although one can never tell whether any of it will lead to something. They're good for parties, and for going places—but none of them has ever been in the least degree serious . . ." None had that certain something that caused one, she was sure, to know that here was what, all her life, she had been waiting for.

She let her hands sink into her lap momentarily, and stared at herself in the mirror with a most woe-begone expression.

So sunk in revery had she become that when the first tones of the breakfast gong shivered through the house she didn't hear them. And she finally emerged, armed with a determined smile, only when her mother had tapped on the door, with the inevitable greetings:

"Happy birthday, dear!"

From downstairs came the voice of her father, slightly off-key as usual:

"Happy birthday! Happy birthday! Cordy's sixteenth year today!"

Cordelia stepped aside with gentle, restrained courtesy, to let her mother precede her. She knew that her childhood was now irrevocably behind her.

Fair Enough

Mr. Scalise's Career

WILLIAM GREEN, the president of the American Federation of Labor, has expressed a belief that George Scalise, the international president of the Building Service Employes' Union, has led an upright life and has rehabilitated himself by honest toil since his conviction in 1913 on a charge of forcing a young woman into prostitution. Being so convinced, apparently without investigating his distinguished colleague's way of life since 1917, when Scalise emerged from Atlanta, Mr. Green a few months ago indorsed Scalise's petition for a full pardon from President Roosevelt and restoration of certain rights of citizenship.

The petition has since been disallowed, and Mr. Scalise now finds himself under multiple indictments obtained by Thomas E. Dewey, charging that he used his union as a blackjack with which to extort money from employers.

For Mr. Green's information and the enlightenment of the toilers who pay Scalise $20,000 a year and expenses without limit out of an annual union kitty of about $400,000 it is here reported that on February 17, 1939, Mr. Scalise flew to Havana for a brief but luxurious sojourn amid the pleasures of that Caribbean capital in company with his old friend little Augie Carfano, alias Pisano, an eminent Brooklyn gangster and strikebreaker, commonly known to the police, the underworld and the turf as Little Aug.

A THIRD MEMBER of the company of honest Yankee tourists was Mr. Tom Burke, of Chicago, third vice president of the international union, or racket operated by the naive Mr. Green, under a charter from the American Federation of Labor. Mr. Burke's rise to his distinguished position in the racket, fourth in line behind a panderer, followed the assassination in Chicago of the real pioneer in this field of labor with a capital L, Mr. Louie (Two-Gun) Alterie, who was known to his colleagues as the man in the iron shirt.

His associates, knowing of this foible, took pains to shoot him in the neck and face when they opened fire from a love nest, or ambuscade, across the street from the apartment in which he lives when official duties in the racket pulled him away from his dude ranch in Colorado. He was racketeering in the Theatrical Janitors' Union.

Progress in the labor movement in Chicago often is promoted in this way. Another conspicuous case was that of the stage hands and movie operators union, or racket, also of the A. F. of L., which gave to the cause of labor with a capital L Willie Bioff, like Scalise, a panderer, soon after the assassination of the pioneer hoodlum, Tommy Maloy.

Little Augie Carfano, or Pisano, has been ambidextrous in his labor activities. That is to say, he has racketeered both for and against the unions, although it is not meant to suggest that he ever racketeered for the workers.

He also has been gambling in liquor and, of course, is a noted figure in the crowds at the hoodlums' horseyard in Miami, formally known as Tropical Park, and at Saratoga. In fact, it was at Saratoga that he was picked up in one of the nine arrests which are cited in his police record, a document which includes three gun charges, one of felonious assault and one of being a fugitive in a murder case.

HE WAS CONVICTED on a gun charge in Miami in 1933, but the winter home of the criminal scum was no more severe than Saratoga, which is by way of being the summer home of the criminal scum of Brooklyn, Manhattan, Mount Vernon or Yonkers. The conviction and a fine or $100 were appealed, and Scalise's comrade, Little Aug, was released. The record says no more about it.

Mr. Scalise, Mr. Burke and Little Aug flew to Havana from Miami on the 17th of February, 1939, and flew back on the 20th, laden with little knickknacks for their dear ones after a happy spell of relaxation at the Hotel Nacional, the most expensive and luxurious on the island, and at the races and in little points of interest around town.

The same charwomen, bellhops, window washers and chambermaids whose mites, contributed out of their small wages, recently enabled Mr. Scalise to buy a mansion on Lake Mamanasco at Ridgefield, Conn., may rejoice to learn that their worthy president thus rehabilitated himself in the company of their third vice president and Little Aug, the antilabor racketeer.

Books And Things

By Lewis Gannett

Fatuous Fifties

THE '90s, you recall, are sometimes labeled as gay, sometimes as naughty, sometimes mauve and sometimes yellow. The '50s, Fred Lewis Pattee points out, might fittingly be called fatuous, fertile, fervid, furbelowed, furious or funny. But he calls his book "The Feminine Fifties" (Appleton, $3).

It was the great era of female fiction. The poetess, as Mr. Pattee points out, flowered in the '40s; three elaborate volumes, published in 1848, were devoted to the female poets of America, and they all seem to have made money for their compilers. Then came the female novelists—they are still going strong.

"The Wide, Wide World" set the tone of the decade. Published at Christmas time, 1850, it went through 14 editions in two years, and was America's "first best-seller." It was written by two melancholy spinsters on Constitution Island, near West Point; Mr. Pattee has counted, and the tears flow 245 times in the book's 574 pages. Harper's had returned the manuscript with one word of rejection, "Fudge." G. P. Putnam astutely gave the manuscript to his mother to read, and accepted it on her say-so. To this day no Putnam book has ever had a larger sale.

"America is now wholly given over to a damned mob of scribbling women," Hawthorne wrote in 1855. There were the gentle Cary sisters, Alice and Phoebe, and the "feminine second flowering of New England:" "Grace Greenwood," "Fanny Fern," Sara Joseph Hale (more famous for "Godey's Lady's Book"), Mary Jane Holmes (total sales, 2,000,000 copies), Harriet Beecher Stowe, Louisa May Alcott and others. Mrs. Hale campaigned for abolition of the word "female," which she regarded as subhuman; in 1867 she induced "Vassar Female College" to chisel the middle word from the inscription on Main Hall; you can still see the curious gap in the stone at Poughkeepsie.

IT WAS THE Jenny Lind decade, the Walt Whitman decade (Mr. Pattee thinks that Walt learned something from Fanny Fern), and the Hiawatha decade. It was also the decade that laughed at Hiawatha. Mr. Pattee lists five parodies, and quotes from one which concludes with "Milkanwatha."

Thinking of his Pogee-wogee,
Of the blue-eyed Sweet Potato,
In the Village of the Noodles.

It sounds like the hard wit of the 1930s, just as Howell's 1858 account of the repartee of the New York Bohemians (he told them Hawthorne was shy, and he was shy, and the "King of Bohemia" interrupted, "Oh, a couple of shysters") sounds pat for 1940 Manhattan cafe chatterers. It was the decade of the great Stephen Foster songs, and the decade in which the Atlantic Monthly was born (about half of its short stories in its first four years were by women).

Mr. Pattee ranges easily over the neglected popular books of the day. He mentions other phenomena of the period, such as P. T. Barnum and the clamor over Kossuth; but his is a book about books. And books are dangerous things by which to judge a decade. What will the historians of the future say, studying these our years in which "Gone With the Wind" and "The Grapes of Wrath" have been the great popular successes?

Ironic Sequel

By Ernest Lindley

Where Criticism Is Due

FOR SEVEN YEARS one of the commonest lines of attack on the New Deal has been: Its objectives are good. But it has tried to achieve them through hastily drawn unworkable legislation. And it has floundered in poor administration.

Obviously there is much ground for this criticism. Extenuating circumstances can be pleaded. Haste was necessary, especially in the critical days of 1933-34. No great new venture, such as social insurance or the regulation of minimum wages and maximum hours, or supervision of the securities markets, can be laid out perfectly in a single law. Experience will always reveal the need for amendments. And no new agency can be organized and put into operation without a certain percentage of inefficiency and error.

Those are explanations, not denials of the core of truth in the indictment.

Now, however, has come a strange and ironic sequel: The Walter-Logan bill, which passed the House by a 3-1 vote last week and is now before the Senate. The purpose of the Walter-Logan bill is indisputably noble. It is to protect the citizen from the arbitrary or unfair exercise of power by administrative agencies. Its original sponsor was a committee of the American Bar Association, and indorsements of it have come from a host of State and local bar associations and other organizations, ranging from the American Federation of Labor to the American Coalition of Patriotic Societies.

THE ORDINARY citizen would presume that with such backing this bill was carefully written and considered. But the opinion of the few qualified experts who have really examined it is overwhelmingly to the contrary. It is doubtful whether in all seven years of its existence the Roosevelt Administration has presented to Congress a bill so poorly drafted to achieve a noble purpose as the Walter-Logan bill is. The administrative errors or deficiencies of the Roosevelt regime are nothing beside the havoc which, in expert opinion, this bill would create in the machinery of Government. Not in decades, if ever, has Congress seriously considered a bill which, in the view of qualified experts, would so seriously disrupt the Government of the United States.

The bill has been condemned not only by experienced men in the Federal Government, but by such conservative leaders of the bar as John Foster Dulles and Alfred Jaretzki, jr., of the New York firm of Sullivan & Cromwell.

In drafting the bill, lobbyists for the American Bar Association seem to have relied heavily on the research work done by F. F. Blachly, of the Brookings Institution, for Senator Byrd's Government reorganization committee. But Mr. Blachly rakes the bill from stem to stern as wholly incompatible with his findings, unworkable, destructive of efficient government, and possibly unconstitutional.

Louis G. Caldwell, formerly general counsel for the old Federal Radio Commission, was cited by Representative Walter as one of the original drafters of the American Bar Association recommendation. So he was. But Mr. Caldwell, a highly conservative Chicago lawyer, has denounced every important feature of the Walter-Logan bill.

HERE IN BRIEF summary are some of Mr. Caldwell's comments:

Section 1, dealing with definitions, is so hazy as to "require a lot of judicial interpretations before it makes sense."

Sections 2 and 3, dealing with rule-making by Federal agencies, subjects "the rule-making process to a very heavy burden, whereas, so far as I know, there is no evil calling for so drastic a measure."

Section 4, dealing with procedure in Government agencies, is in some respects "a step backward and not a step forward from the point of view of bringing order out of chaos in administrative law." No existing evil in any independent agency would be cured, and many agencies already have procedures superior to those which would be imposed on them by the Walter-Logan act.

Section 5, providing for judicial review of proceedings, adds little or nothing to the protection of the individual already available.

Contrary to the claims of its proponents, the bill "does not promote uniformity to any serious degree."

IT EXEMPTS certain agencies, without rhyme or reason, except that they "protested loudly enough" to the American Bar Association.

Why, in the face of the opinion of experts, to the right and to the left, that it is a monstrosity, has the Walter-Logan bill been able to muster support among bar associations and in Congress? There are, I think, two reasons. One is ignorance of what it would really do. The other is the feeling that something ought to be done to give the citizen greater protection against high-handed actions by Government agencies.

There may be a third reason: it would create a lot of business for lawyers. One analyst estimates that it would produce from 150,000 to 200,000 lawsuits per annum.

There may be still a fourth: that powerful interests believe that in this way they can nullify the Federal regulatory power.

There is no emergency justifying the enactment of a half-baked, destructive bill. By passing it the House has jolted the complacency of some of the New Deal agencies. After the next election it may be possible to deal with the question intelligently. If the Senate is not carried away by sheer emotion it will defeat the bill, or recommit it for further study.

Stream Of Destiny

By Dorothy Thompson

I. The Blue Danube Is Brown

Bucharest.

WHILE WAR wages on the North Sea and in Norway, another war is waging on the river best known through the world's most popular waltz. The Blue Danube is not blue this spring, but brown. The peasant folk who live along it are fighting their own war with the river itself. The hardest winter in years was followed by the break-up of the ice and the melting of snows under which the river burst its banks and flooded the fields of Hungary, Rumania, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia.

As we travel along this stream, widened in many places into muddy lakes, we see the red-tiled roofs of the peasants' houses floating pathetically just above the ebbing tide, the thatched roofs of stalls settling into mire and acres of carefully tended orchards stretched out into the waters until the tips of the young trees disappear in the stream.

The waters rose while the men of these countries were mobilized. Women and children were left to fight the floods. Such winter wheat as was not frozen was drowned. The peasants will do without their good wheat this year; the women and children will eat cold cornmeal mush with their soured milk, for the wheat is needed for the national armies—soldiers demand bread.

Perhaps the corn will produce a fine crop this season. In any case, the granary will be much smaller than usual after the next harvest, and who knows whether this, too, will play a role in the strategy of the war, making this year more favoriable for Germany than next.

THE DANUBE is a river of destiny. Once it rose in Austria, almost at the Swiss border. Now its source is German. It flows through Germany, Hungary, Yugoslavia, then forms the border between Rumania and Bulgaria, until it empties into the Black Sea in Rumania again.

The nation that controls this river from its source to its outlet would become the greatest power in Europe, and might become the greatest power in the world.

Greater Germany is already a nation of 106,000,000 people. South and east along this river are four more nations which, incorporated into the Reich or vassal to it, would add another 45,000,000 people to Germany—people who are accustomed to soldiery, who are 30 per cent peasant, and whose birthrate and surplus of births over deaths is the highest in Europe.

The German Reich, with the most efficient industrial plants in the world outside of the United States, and with a thickly settled population, knows these countries better than any other power. Her agronomists and geologists and industrial experts have surveyed the terrain in all its details. How much could these wide and fertile plains yield were they worked by modern scientific methods, they have asked.

These peasants are patient, hard working, submissive people. Mush and milk, cucumbers and cabbage are their fare. Their two-room houses are bright with whitewash tinted blue or yellow, sometimes painted with bright designs. Their national independence is a new thing. They have lived during the centuries under the rule of the Romans, under the rule of the Turks in the heyday of the Ottoman Empire and under the loose and easy-going confederation of the Austro-Hungarian Empire.

Always they have worked hard and produced hardy offspring. Their brawn helped open the mines and build the railroads and industries of the United States, where no one knows them as Yugoslavs, Rumanians or Bulgarians, but, massed them under the epithet of "Hunkies."

BUT THEY HAVE more than wide fields and submissive brawn. A few days ago we drove through the forests of Ploesti and Moreni, only 15 miles or so from the Rumanian capital of Bucharest, where the trees are dwarfed by forests of oil derricks as thick as the trees themselves and stretching as far as the eye can see—the richest oil fields in Europe outside of Russia and not yet exploited, say the Germans, to the extent that they could be.

On the train, between the Yugoslav and Bulgarian frontier, we passed great wastes of treeless mountains, a desert of rock, but in the waste on the Yugoslav side are copper mines richer than those of the famous Rio Tinto in Spain. Under the soil held by the Hunkies of the Danube countries are gold and silver and iron—all the things the Reich wants and needs; an empire lying at the door of the opening into the Black Sea, the gateway to Asia.

Add these countries as political and military protectorates to the Reich, under a monopolistic economic system, and the Reich would have a population larger than that of the United States, with resources sufficient to feed her people and her industries.

Nor would there be any "decadent" ideas of freedom and democracy—outworn and sentimental shibboleths. There is no equality between the strong and the weak, the conqueror and the conquered. The organization would be strictly hierarchical: a single authority at the top, under a praetorian guard of officers and soldiers of the master race; under them the workers—the Germans the skilled, the non-Germans the unskilled, a society compact, solid, military and rigidly controlled—a system of "Prussian Socialism."

NOR WOULD Germany need to stop there in the decades and generations ahead. Odessa is not farther from the mouth of the Danube than New York from Baltimore. The Ukraine lies beyond Rumania, on the Black Sea, and in it are Russia's granaries and almost the whole bulk of her industries. Turkey has only 17,000,000 people and beyond her lies the whole Near East—Irak, Persia, Arabia.

Russia? The Germans regard her with contempt. Why else did Stalin seek an arrangement with Hitler except from fear of a war with Germany—even on the side of the Allies?

LET HITLER get the Danube, and Mussolini can have Africa. Eurasia will have come into being. France will be another Sweden. Weakened by war with Germany, let France struggle with Italy for Africa! Germany will need no black men for her empire. She will be a land power and a sea power, ranking among the continents, not merely among nations, with Britain but a little island in the Atlantic.

So runs the Nazi argument. Only the United States of America will be her equal and her rival, and Americans are not imperially minded. This is the dream of Lebensraum, and with the annexation of a few more little countries Germany could become the greatest world power.

THIS WAR IS a struggle for a stream—a stream as vital to Europe as the Mississippi is to the United States. That the war is being fought at this moment in the far northwest does not change the fact, for to get this stream Germany must first crack Britain and France.

But the peasants along the stream are peaceful. Where the waters have receded or did not come they are spading their fields. They do not talk about politics, but about crops.

This war, they say, is not their war. The cost of living has gone up scandalously. "It is too bad that the men must be in barracks when one needs them at home," they say. 'Our best cow was drowned this spring, and the two young pigs. If the cornmeal gets moldy one gets scabs on one's hands—scabs mean pellagra. We do not need much from the towns. All that we wear we spin and weave from hemp or wool; all winter our women embroider the garments and in summer work with us in the fields. We had an uncle once, who went to America. America is a very great country. It is the very greatest country in the world."

The peasants of the Danube are more interested in America than in Germany.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

The Trojan Horse

"'Its says in the newspapers that what happened to Norway was on account of a Trojan horse."

"Yeah. I didn't even know they had any tracks over there."

"Well, I guess this horse-racing thing has spread so they have scandals all over."

"I knew horses could make lots of trouble, but I didn't know they could cause wars."

"Wasn't there a Trojan Maid at New Orleans?"

"I think so. A 2-year-old filly, but she's still in this country. She never showed nuthin' that would upset Norway or Denmark. In fact, there was nuthin' about that skinner that would upset anything."

"But I still see in the headlines every day that them Norwegians blame it all on a Trojan horse just the same, and I can't dope it out."

"I heard somebody saying that it ain't no regular horse like you find in the daily entries, and that it's a very ancient horse."

"That's all they have in most races you see today — ancient horses. They's ancient enough right here on American tracks; they must be awful in Norway and Sweden."

"I mean what I heard was that the Trojan horse was owned away back before any of the horses you and me know anything about."

"Further back than El Puma, Watersplash and Play Gold?"

"Further back even than Mobcap, Weary Flower, Brass Monkey and Building Trades, which I seen in an entry the other day."

"They must have awful tracks over in Europe."

"The way I heard it was that this Trojan was a horse that figured in Greek history."

"Oh, I remember sumpin' about that from my school days. It was one of the most sensational horse plays of all times. The Greeks were double-crossed by it."

"That's the one!"

"The enemies of the Greeks gave it to 'em."

"It was the way the Greeks first got interested in horses."

"And they lost everything after that. I remember now."

Peace As A Policy

By Barnet Nover

A Lesson From Scandinavia

WHEN THE PRESENT war began no region in Europe was more definitely and wholeheartedly committed to a policy of peace than Scandinavia.

Neither Norway nor Sweden, neither Denmark nor Finland, had any designs on any nations. They were content with what they had. They harbored no open or secret territorial ambitions. They were wholly free of the false belief that a nation's greatness can only be reckoned in terms of size or martial prowess. They wanted only to be let alone to pursue the arts of peace as they had done for so long and with such remarkably constructive results. And to win the right to remain at peace they were prepared to treat and did treat the opposing belligerents with even-handed impartiality.

WHAT HAS been the result? The record speaks for itself and it is a grim record indeed.

Finland was invaded by Russia and despite fierce resistance was finally forced to cede to the aggressor an economically important and strategically invaluable stretch of territory. Denmark has been overrun. Norway is now a battlefield, indeed the major battlefield of the war. Only Sweden has avoided invasion but its immunity may be only temporary.

What the Scandinavian nations most feared has come upon them. Neither a long and fruitful record of well-doing nor a careful neutrality policy has saved them. Their crime was to be small and weak and more or less helpless. Their very virtues have been turned against them.

YET AS a group they are not wholly free from blame for what has happened. Their present tragic plight is in part, at least, the result of a prolonged and excessive addiction to the belief that if a nation wants peace earnestly enough it will have it regardless of the tides and tempests sweeping over the rest of the world.

In other words, the four Scandinavian nations made peace the be-all and the end-all of their foreign policies. That was noble of them. It showed how completely civilized they were. But it ultimately led them as it has led other nations down the path of disaster.

The events of the past decade have made it clear that peace cannot safely be made the basis of policy but if it is to be achieved it can only be as the resultant of policy. Its fulfillment does not belong in the realm of will but in that of action.

ON OCTOBER 19, 1939, seven weeks after the outbreak of the European war and six weeks before Russia's attack on Finland, the sovereigns of Sweden, Denmark and Norway and the President of Finland met at Stockholm to discuss the situation facing the four nations of the North.

"Our consultations," said King Gustav of Sweden on that occasion, "have confirmed the solidarity of the governments of the northern states." This theme ran through all the other speeches made at the meeting. "I am convinced," said King Haakon of Norway, "that our collaboration with the other northern peoples in the interests of peace has been consolidated and strengthened in these days," while President Kallio of Finland gave hearty thanks to "our friends for all the support and sympathy which have been extened to us."

WHEN THE successive tests came in the months that followed, the unity of sentiment which bound the four Scandinavian nations proved inadequate to save any of them. Sweden and Norway did send a good deal of unofficial assistance to Finland. But that aid was insufficient. The kind of assistance that might have proved decisive was never rendered; to have done so would have endangered that very policy of peace which each of the other Scandinavian nations had made the cornerstone of its foreign relations.

What would have happened had these four nations not limited their cooperation to the moral and diplomatic sphere, but had formed a solid bloc to defend any one of them against any and all aggressors is conjectural. But there is at least a possibility that it would have had a deterrent effect on Russia last September and on Germany more recently. Certainly the lot of the Scandinavian nations would not be worse than it already is. For together the four nations have a population of close to 17,000,000 and a combined fighting force capable of giving any aggressor a run for his money. The Scandinavian nations refused to hang together, with the result that they are hanging separately.

The tragedy of Finland and Denmark and Norway, the impending tragedy of Sweden, are but the latest chapters in a sorry tale that began in Manchuria in 1931 and has since circled the globe.

Like the Scandinavian countries, Great Britain and France also wanted peace and also made it, for years, the be-all and the end-all of their policies. The result was Ethiopia and Munich and war. Nor can the people of the United States view developments taking place in Scandinavia with any measure of complacence. Quite the contrary. These developments have a lesson for us which cannot be disregarded with impunity. For there are loud voices raised in this land which repeatedly insist that peace is something you can achieve by wishing, by legislation, by oratorical legerdemain. The struggle in Norway shows how dangerous an illusion that can be.

UNDAUNTED—The cool mountain-fed waters of the Potomac held no apparent chills for Howard Florance (left) and Joe Johnson, who plunged into the river at the Washington Canoe Club, just to demonstrate that spring is here. The maximum temperature for the day was 66 degrees

COOLING OFF—Snowy, the polar bear at the Zoo, took a plunge in the water, too, as he found his white coat too heavy for the rising thermometer.

Typical of Capital On Balmy Day

SPRING came again to Washington yesterday, bringing with it thousands of visitors and sending countless Washingtonians out-of-doors.

To Rock Creek Park, the Zoo, the Tidal Basin and Hains Point they went—lazily.

Long lines of traffic snaked around Hains Point with carloads of Sunday wanderers pausing to view buds of the double cherry blossoms. Park police said the blossoms would not be in full beauty until the middle of the week.

To the Zoo went an estimated 40,000 visitors. But as popular as the lion house were the benches where visitors could sit and absorb sun rays.

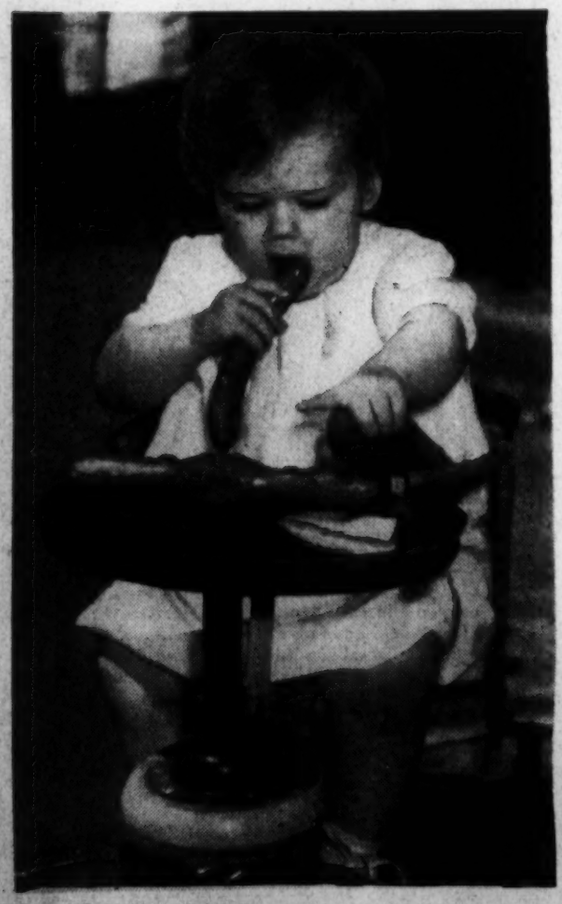
ON horseback and on foot hundreds followed the trails of Rock Creek Park. Many others sought recreation on golf courses and tennis courts.

It was a Sunday driver's day, with traffic flooding the highways into Maryland and Virginia to historic and picturesque spots.

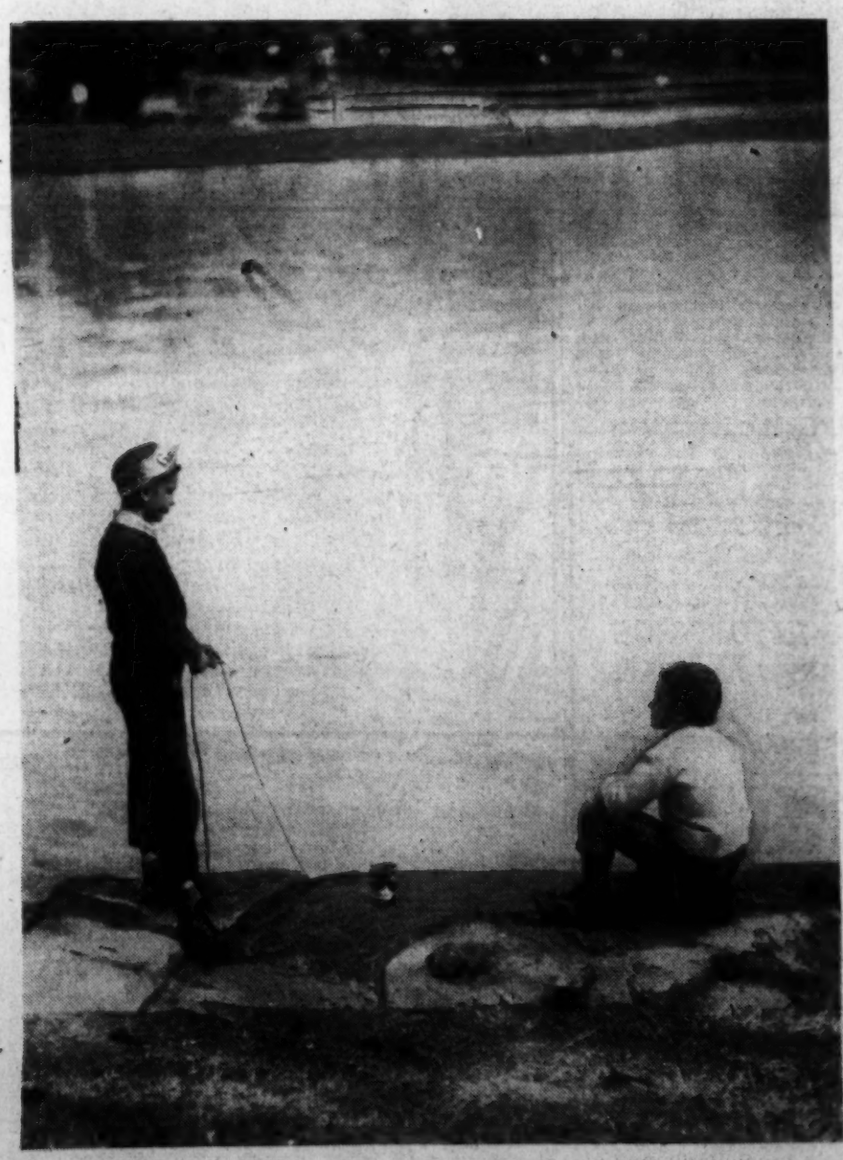
It was also a bench-sitter's day. Park benches were at a premium for those who preferred to sit and let Nature come to them instead of charging along highways in search of her.

A newspaper and a bag of peanuts—a camera if you had one—were equipment for the bench sitter. Sun, squirrels and pigeons all came to those who only sat.

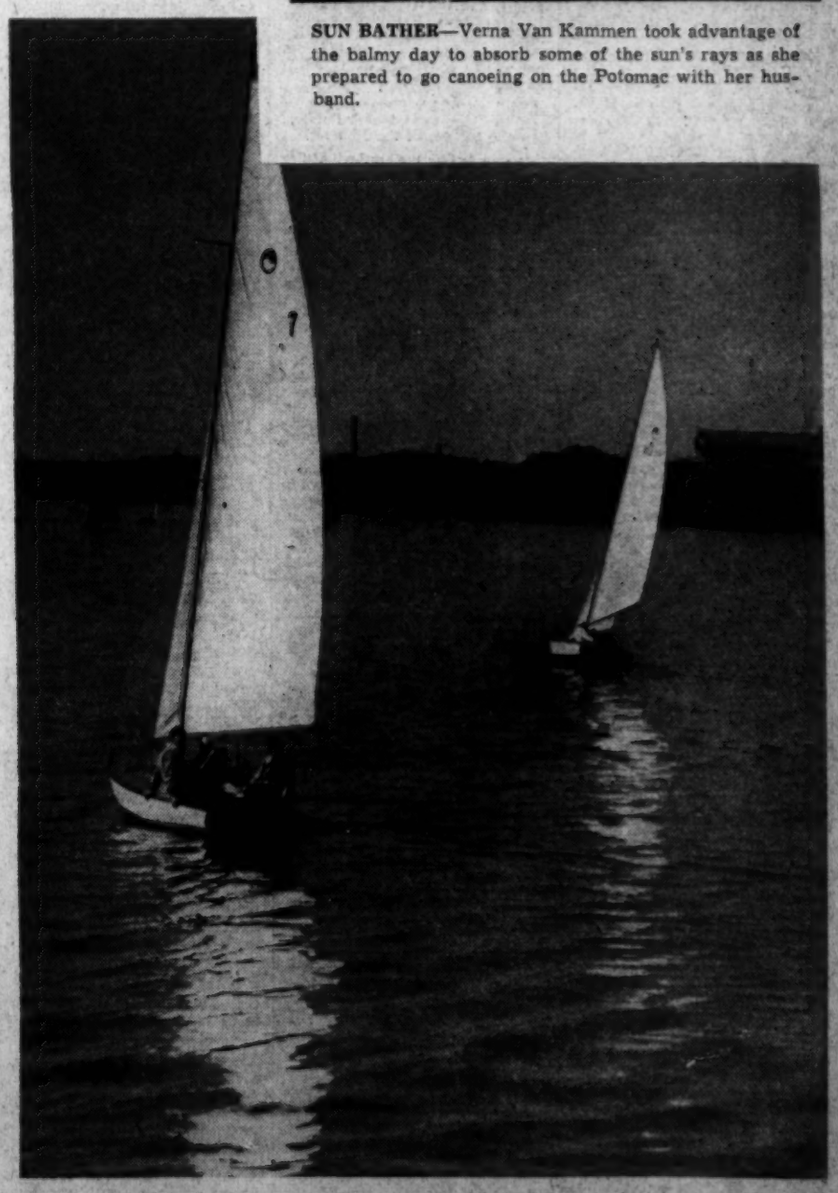
SUN BATHER—Verna Van Kammen took advantage of the balmy day to absorb some of the sun's rays as she prepared to go canoeing on the Potomac with her husband.



TIME OUT FOR LUNCH—Addie Ann Richardson, 11 months, likes to eat when she is hungry. (Note to anxious mothers: She didn't really eat the hot dog.)



FISHERMEN—No studying this week-end. Fish—any kind, any size—was the only thought on the minds of Billy Ramsey (left) and Harold Hobbs, pictured with their handlines in the river.



SAILING—With danger of frostbite apparently over, the skippers of Washington's sailing fleet didn't miss a chance to get winter's wrinkles out of their canvas.

Nazi Invasion Long Planned, Says Hambro

Norway's Legation Knew Troops Sailed April 2, He Asserts

By the United Press

Stockholm, April 28.—Germany planned the invasion of Norway for months and the Norwegian legation in Berlin had proof that Nazi troops sailed from German ports a week before the invasion began, C. J. Hambro, president of the Norwegian Parliament, charged today.

Hambro denied the allegations of Joachim von Ribbentrop, German foreign minister, that Norway was preparing to permit Great Britain and France to debark troops on Norwegian soil before the Nazi invasion.

Hambro, who also is chairman of the Norwegian foreign affairs committee, declared:

"We now have irrefutable proof that Germany prepared detailed plans for the invasion of Norway months before it actually occurred," Hambro charged. "We would have been in a better position today if the British really had troops ready to land and even more if the Allied intelligence service, which knew of the German preparations, had warned us previously."

Troops' Destination Was Unknown

Von Ribbentrop in Berlin yesterday charged Norway "aided and abetted" plans for an Allied Scandinavian front so Germany could be destroyed. He charged that the British had troops on the way to Norway before mines were laid in Norwegian waters April 6. The Nazi foreign minister said Germany merely beat Britain to the draw by invading Norway April 9.

But Hambro charged that Germany was the one who had troops on the way first to Norway.

"We are not happy to have to admit that our legation in Berlin had news of German debarkation parties sailing from German ports a week before the attacks on Norway started," Hambro said. "We now have statements from members of our legation that they knew for some weeks that German troops were being concentrated at various German ports, but on information given our legation they did not believe that the troops were intended for an attack on Norway. . . .

Soldiers in Ports 5 Days

"The fact that the Allies never informed the Norwegian government at the time of German intentions is evidence that they looked upon Norway as absolutely neutral . . .

"We now have gathered mass evidence from Norwegian pilots, harbor masters and other persons connected with shipping that German ships, which later disgorged soldiers from their holds as landing parties at our principal ports, had left German ports more than a week before April 9—the day of the German invasion.

"We have cases where German soldiers issued fully armed and equipped from ships which had been lying in Norwegian ports four or five days previous to the invasion.

"There is the case of the 11,000-ton whaler which brought the major landing force and arms to Narvik. It is a most clear indication of the care and premeditation connected with the German invasion. This ship, called the Jan Wellem, entered Norwegian territorial waters at Andalsnes Lighthouse north of Harstad the morning of April 8. A Norwegian pilot reported that it would take a minimum of a week to have reached this point from the German point of departure.

"The pilot, who escaped from Narvik after the German occupation, was amazed to see that this ship, which, ostensibly was coming from an Arctic whaling expedition, was unloading soldiers and munitions.

"Similar ships were in Trondheim, Bergen, Stravanger and Oslo harbors for days before."

Hambro said that "Norwegian naval authorities state that it would take a minimum of four days for a destroyer to reach Narvik from Germany sailing at maximum speed."

Swedish Press Skeptical

Stockholm, April 28 (INS).—The Swedish press tonight, in effect, requested proof from Nazi newspapers that Germany believes, as stated by Foreign Minister Von Ribbentrop, that Sweden's neutrality is "absolutely sincere."

Swedish opinion displayed satisfaction over Von Ribbentrop's declaration, but urged that the German press refrain from violent attacks on Sweden for "nonneutrality."

However, Swedish circles stated they were still convinced that Norway observed strict neutrality before the German invasion of Scandinavia.

British Navy Hopes to Clear Trondheim Fjord, A Difficult Feat, Says Admiral Stirling

By Rear Admiral Yates Stirling, jr.
U. S. Navy, Retired
By the United Press

New York, April 28.—The occupation of Trondheim Fjord, because of its importance to the fighting on land, seems to be a task that should have been undertaken earlier by the British navy.

On this great fjord are situated three strategically useful cities—Trondheim, Levanger and Steinkjer. Levanger and Steinkjer now are the scene of land fighting. Trondheim is a key seaport. With its large airport that city is too valuable to have been left so long in German hands.

The British navy now appears anxious to enter the Trondheim Fjord and wrest that vital and vast inland waterway from the enemy. This may prove to be a feat equal in scope to Farragut's assault on Mobile Bay or Admiral Nelson's attack on the Danish fleet at Copenhagen.

The Allied expeditionary forces, at Namsos and Andalsnes, without full equipment if reports can be believed, had as their main objective the capture of the City of Trondheim. The Namsos force, lacking guns, tanks and airplanes, pushed down toward Levanger, while the Andalsnes force was rushed up towards Trondheim. Both forces now have been halted by the far-better-equipped German opposition.

British warships and airplanes are reported to be bombarding and bombing the German-held Agdenes Fort defending the approaches to Trondheim.

Fort Is Key to Fjord

The attacking force, if it intends full occupation of the fjord, will include battleships, cruisers, destroyers, submarines and airplanes, together with vessels necessary for mine sweeping. Transport ships with troops must accompany the naval ships to consolidate gains and to occupy the key positions after the warships' guns have beaten down enemy naval and land resistance. Success of such an expedition would relieve the dangerous pressure by the enemy on the two land fronts where Allied forces are fighting toward the city of Trondheim.

Once the Agdenes fort is passed, a sufficiently powerful British naval force should have little trouble in reaching all three cities in the Fjord.

The capture of this important body of water and its complete control by the Allies is a vital step in the operations toward the defeat of the German army in Norway.

The Germans probably have had ample time to improvise a defense of the fjord with guns and may have mined it in places. Also to be encountered will be German ships—probably destroyers, submarines and mine layers—left in the fjord to resist the anticipated British attack.

To give an idea of the difficulty of the task confronting the British navy, it should be explained that Trondheim is 72 miles up the fjord from the sea, Levanger 105 miles and Steinkjer 121 miles.

Trondheim Fjord can be entered from the sea by two channels.

The southern entrance, the Ramso channel, is the shallowest, easier to mine and not as safe as the route from the north.

The northern route seems clearer for navigating an expedition against opposition. That route leads first through the Fro Havet, an inlet 15 miles wide and from 1,000 to 1,200 feet deep, 35 miles southward to the Kraakvaag Channel.

Must Silence Field Guns

After passing through the 2½-mile-wide Kraakvaag Channel, the warships must make two right angle turns. The first is to the left, along a channel 15 miles long and two miles wide, where field guns may have been mounted. At the end of this channel is Agdenes Point, where there are modern fortifications manned by German troops. Here the channel turns right, running 12 miles along a route 2½ miles wide where field guns opposition again may be expected.

The only serious permanent obstruction on the northern route, however, is the fort at Agenes Narrows. At this point the channel is scarcely more than a mile and a half wide, almost point blank range for modern artillery. This fort, however, need not be difficult to silence and to capture with a landing party.

The city of Trondheim is in sight, 10 miles farther up the fjord.

After occupying Trondheim, warships may push on 33 miles to Levanger, along channels in some places as narrow as 2 miles, and to Steinkjer. Steinkjer is reached by way of the Skarn Sundet, a channel but 1,000 yards wide at its narrowest point and from 300 to 1,300 feet deep. Here mines may be expected.

There is an 8½-foot rise and fall of the tide at Trondheim and strong tidal currents are to be encountered at Agdenes and in the Skarn Sundet passage.

It seems most evident that the seizure of the entire Trondheim Fjord and the occupation of its three cities are tasks which the British navy must at once accomplish in spite of the risk to valuable warships, if the Allies are to win quickly the battle for Norway. Trondheim Fjord is the strategical key to the land fighting in Norway.

The success of this naval attack would give the Allies convenient localities for the landing of troops and heavy military equipment, although it must be expected that the Germans would have destroyed the port facilities before retreating. The Allies also would gain suitable air fields from which to operate planes and no longer would be forced to use valuable and vulnerable aircraft carriers and hastily prepared level ground for landing planes. Flying planes from the British Isles to Norway, where they can operate only a limited time before returning for fuel, is most uneconomical and greatly reduces the Allied air forces available to protect the troops from enemy air attacks.

7-Alarm Blaze in Baltimore

Baltimore, April 28 (AP).—Seven firemen were injured, none seriously, in a seven-alarm fire that swept three floors of the Joe Fisher general merchandise warehouse near the center of Baltimore's business district tonight.

It was the third major blaze in the warehouse area in the past week.

Louis Fisher estimated damage at approximately $100,000.

One fireman was killed and three seriously hurt last Tuesday when a wall collapsed during a fire at a feed warehouse four blocks from tonight's blaze.

Last Monday an eight-alarm fire caused damage estimated by the owners at $100,000 in the furniture warehouse of the Four Besche Bros.

Rome Uprising Held Warning

Rome, April 28.—Yugoslav circles today were deeply fearful an anti-Yugoslav demonstration yesterday in Florence meant the beginning of new phase in Italo-Yugoslav relations, which since the conclusion of the 1937 pact of friendship have been excellent.

Moreover, another disturbing sign was seen in the recall of the 1916 class. It is not yet known whether it is partial or total recall but it is sufficient to show that Italy does not expect the tension to decrease and that she is taking additional precautionary measures to face any eventuality.

That developments in the Balkans may start soon was inferred in an article by Virginio Gayda today in which he warns the "governments and peoples" of southeastern Europe that it would be a fatal error to second the game of the Allies, which, he says, are stirring up trouble in that sector against Italy and Germany.

What especially impresses the Yugoslavs is that the Italian authorities not only allowed the demonstration, but even gave it official sanction, since the students, after marching through the streets, were gathered in the local Fascio club to listen to a speech.

The incident was stated to have been caused by an anti-Italian manifesto reported published in Yugoslavia's Lubiana Province, in which Slovenes were said to have demanded the restitution of Trieste, the Littoral, Istria and Carinthia.

The demonstration was carried out by a group of about 500 students, a large number of whom wore the Fascist uniform.

Italian quarters see it as Italy's warning and reaction to some unspecified "Allied manoeuvre" in Belgrade. Gayda, after stating that the Allies are trying to drag the Balkans into the conflict, adds:

"The Allied attempt continues. Intrigues, pressures, instigations and aggressive attitudes against Germany and Italy which originate from boisterous residues of national parties and factions are showing here and there to a watchful observer.

"Typicol is the affair of the anti-Italian pamphlets of Lubiana. Everything is covered under the clamor of the usual voices which pretend to denounce aggressive but never proved threats on the part of Germany and Italy, against which England and France should hurl themselves in the classic role of saviors.

"The game is clear. It would be a fatal error not to understand it and to support it with imprudent actions which would be taken as proof of complicity. Governments and peoples are warned."

Bucharest, April 28 (AP).—The government prohibited all airplane flights over Rumania except those of regular air lines today and put antiaircraft guns and military guards at Bucharest's Civil Airport.

The reason was not disclosed, but the precautions were believed to have resulted from widespread rumors that a German "mystery plane" was en route to Bucharest.

Sun Brings Parties Out to Terraces

Senator and Mrs. Clark Entertain For J. M. Thomsons, E. E. Pershalls; Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Jones Hosts

SOCIETY MOVED OUT on terraces and lawns yesterday afternoon as the first really pleasant Sabbath of the spring was featured by half a dozen teas and cocktail parties.

Among the hosts were Senator and Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark, of Missouri, who entertained in honor of Mr. and Mrs. James M. Thomson, of New Orleans and Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Pershall, of St. Louis. Mrs. Thomson is Senator Clark's sister and her husband is publisher of the New Orleans Item-Tribune. Both have been in New York this week for the meetings of publishers and editors and the attendant gay festivities.

Mrs. Clark invited people who had met the Thomsons on previous visits. She opened up the terrace of her house, and the guests wandered out there, highballs or tea-cups in hand. Among the callers were Justice and Mrs. Felix Frankfurter, Justice and Mrs. Stanley Reed, Secretary and Mrs. Harry Woodring, and many from the Senatorial group.

The pretty, attractive hostess wore a street length frock of navy blue marquisette, embroidered in tiny bunches of violets. Her tea table was centered with an unusual Japanese flower arrangement of calla lilies, which Mrs. William A. Morgan had sent over to the Clarks.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomson will be here several days enroute to New Orleans and are making their headquarters at the Mayflower. Mrs. Clark, Mrs. Morgan and Mrs. Pershall returned on Saturday from a week's trip to the beautiful old houses and gardens along the James River. Mrs. Clark reports that they had a lot of fun, but that the weather was terrible and they had "a cloudburst with every house."

Party Returns From Tour

Another tea given yesterday was that held by Mr. and Mrs. F. Henry Jones, who followed the party with a buffet supper for 40. Honor guests at the latter affair were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas J. Bray, of Sewickley, Pa., who arrived yesterday morning. Mr. Bray returned last evening, but his wife will be here until the end of the week. She received with her hostess at the tea yesterday.

Brazilian Ambassador, Mme. Martins Given Dinner in Honor of Paul Manship

THE BRAZILIAN AMBASSADOR and Mme. Martins gave a dinner the other night in honor of Paul Manship, the famous sculptor.

Mr. Manship was accompanied to Washington by his daughter, Pauline, a most attractive young woman who lost no time in making friends with everyone present. She was dressed in a Victorian frock of red and white plaid taffeta made with puffed sleeves and a square neckline and wore her sleek, black hair drawn straight back into a knot at the back.

Her chief interest is in dress designing but she also is proficient at solving puzzles. The puzzle in question is the maddening one where one victim's wrists are tied together with a string about a yard long and a second victim is treated in the same way, the second string having been passed through the first one before being tied. The solution of this "tie-up" is so simple that one is doubly annoyed at having gone through so many ridiculous and useless gyrations in an attempt to get free.

MR. MANSHIP besides being a great sculptor is a very entertaining person and has a nice wit.

Among the Martins' other guests were the Attache of the British Embassy and Mrs. Harold Sims, Representative John Vorys, of Ohio, and his statuesque, blond wife; Marian Trumbull, in beige with a matching jacket studded in gold nailheads; Fernando Saboia, second secretary of the embassy, and M. and Mme. Hugo Gouthier, also of the embassy staff.

Mme. Gouthier, who is as pretty as a picture and doesn't look a day over 18, wore a white robe de style and had tucked a white flower into her dark hair. Our hostess, who is a sculptor of ability, wore a beautifully draped gown in a bright spring print.

MRS GEORGE T. MARYE gathered in a large and jolly group of people for dinner before the Friday Club dance. The guests were of all ages, shapes, and sizes and came in all sorts of costumes, many of them being in the fancy dress required for the Supper Club masquerade.

Among Mrs. Marye's guests were Arthur Bradley Campbell and his two debutante cousins, the latter in gay peasant costumes; Clarence Hewes with his niece, Ellen Floweree who was charming in a white ante-bellum (War-between-the-States) costume; one of the pretty and perplexing vom Rath twins, in Russian dress; Peggy Wagner in a stunning Chinese costume; and Jimmie Mitchell in little-boy play overalls.

THE CLIMAX of the evening was the moment after dinner when Jock Merriam walked in dressed in his mother's red velvet evening gown, wearing a handsome black wig and pearl jewelry, and padded out to a Mae West figure.

Others, more conventionally dressed, were Mrs. Kent Legare in a dark blue and white print worn with sapphires; Mrs. Foulke Dewey in black wearing her hair rolled up becomingly all around; Mrs. Wallach Merriam Thomas Waterman, and James Beck.

Mrs. Marye wore a gray lace dress, with a lovely diamond necklace. Her son-in-law and daughter, Commander and Mrs. William D. Thomas, assisted her in receiving guests.

GLIMPSES AT THE Maryland Hunt Cup on Saturday: Glenn Abbey, of the State Department, squiring a pretty blond and lamenting that he had just slammed the spring-lock door on his car with all of his keys inside; Miguel Quirno-Lavalle, of the Argentine Embassy, looking over the horses in the paddock with an expert eye; Amory Lawrence with an attractive girl in a gray flannel tailleur; Mrs. Marshall Exnicios making her own little sweepstakes with a friend; young Edgar Prochnik sitting happily on a fence in the sun while he waited for his parking lot to be clear enough for action, and the gentleman jockey who was riding in second place when his horse went down after a jump and who pulled his mount to its feet, regained his stirrup and continued the race, all without losing his place in the field.

MRS. HENDRICK EUSTIS, the fascinating Grace, who was one of Washington's favorite hostesses a few years ago is here for a visit to Mrs. Nicholas Longworth. Mrs. Longworth entertained at a buffet supper last night in honor of her house guest.

Mrs. Eustis will join a party going to the Kentucky Derby in Louisville, where she will visit Miss Henrietta Bingham, daughter of the late United States Ambassador to the Court of St. James's. In the party with Mrs. Eustis will be the Harold Guinsburgs. He is the head of the Viking Press.

Frieses Hosts To Hawaiians

An unusual Hawaiian style "open house" was held last evening by Gen. and Mrs. Amos A. Fries and their daughter, Mrs. Frederic A. Henney, who has spent some time in the islands and is noted as a hula dancer. Guests of honor were three singers and dancers from Hawaii, who came here for the Folk Festival and have been staying with Gen. and Mrs. Fries.

The artists are Iolani Luahine, rated as the finest dancer of Hawaii; Mrs. Rosalie Montgomery and Miss Alice Brown. They are the first to present the ancient dances here for many years.

Baskets of fruit, Hawaiian style, were placed here and there in the Fries living room, and the house was decorated with the flowers presented the singers and dancers by their admirers. A Dutch supper was served from a big table, where guests helped themselves to ham, turkey, sliced bread, cheese, and other edibles.

Several of the guests—there were about 100—had formerly lived in Hawaii, and are authorities on the hula. The party ended up gaily with everybody either doing or looking on fascinated at this difficult dance.

The Head Table

"Now who is going to sit at the head table?"

"Oh, let's put some of the more—well, inconspicuous members there for a change."

All right. What about Mrs. Horner? She says nobody ever pays any attention to her."

"Well, we'd have to put that Mrs. Chirp there too. They're always together."

"Heavens! You never can tell what Cynthia Chirp's going to say."

"Of course we might put them both at the end—so they'd be as far away as possible from the guest of honor."

"That would cause more trouble than if we didn't put them there at all."

"Say, what about Mabel Flitt? She's a good talker."

"But she wouldn't get there until it was half over—and then make such a commotion."

"Well, then, Adele Hazey."

"She'd probably forget to come and we'd have an empty plate."

"Well, if she did that, we could put somebody in at the last minute from one of the other tables."

"Then those who weren't chosen from that table would be mad."

"Why don't we put Estelle Frowsey at the head table? She probably wear that fruit center-has a wonderful mind."

"I know, but think of her hats! She'd probably wear that fruit centerpiece."

"Well, after all, this isn't a fashion show."

"I know, but we at least want our speaker to think we're smart looking."

"Oh, say, we ought to put someone at the head table from Marie Hopper's clique!"

"What about Marie herself?"

"Oh, but she doesn't speak to Zenobia March."

"Well, why does Zenobia March have to sit at the head table?"

"I don't know—she always does."

"Let's put her at another table."

"It wouldn't do any good. She always moves her place card and sits where she pleases."

"What about putting Margie Meek at the head table? She's a friend of both factions."

"She sat there last time and besides she never opens her mouth."

"Well then, that new Mrs. Flytie?"

"The older members wouldn't like it."

"All right. What about Kitty Doodle?"

"She never pays her dues."

"What about that Mrs. Minch?"

"We could ask the hotel not to have chicken."

"Then she'd pick up the lamb chop."

"I tell you who's good looking enough—Hannah Stepp."

I know, but there's all this talk about her now—with Art Mooner."

"Still that's none of our business."

"I know. "I'm as broad as anyone, but after all, Nell Mooner's a member of the club."

"That's so. Well, Ann Mosey's smart enough looking."

"Yes, but she's never done anything for the club."

"Say, Bodelia Strong hasn't been at the head table for a long time!"

"I know, but everybody says she tries to run things too much."

"There's Harriet Drumm——"

"She's likely to start a fight about Roosevelt——"

"And Sadie Dart——"

"She's so hipped on the New Deal——"

"Oh, well, I guess there's nothing to do but fall back on——"

"The club officers!"

Housecoats Double As Dinner Gowns

Right—A housecoat designed with an eye for comfort in sleek Eastman's teca rep, a crush resistant new rayon. It is gleaming white piped with bright polka dots and buttoned down the front with shiny discs. Its charm lies in its slenderizing silhouette and simplicity

Left—A housecoat or dinner-at-home robe which captivates by its simplicity of silhouette. It is in the coolest and most sophisticated color scheme of the season, clear gray and white rayon crepe in circus stripes. The circus stunt doesn't end there either for a froth of white organza makes the collar similar to Pagliaccis' clown ruff

Flashlights in Umbrella Handles

An innovation in accessories is an umbrella with a flashlight handle made of crystal clear "Lucite," the du Pont plastic which carries light around curves.

The design is the currently favored parabrella type. At the base of the "Lucite," a section of the handle is covered with a black rubber material (which conceals the battery and bulb), the black and crystal making an effective contrast. Three handle shapes are offered, the right angle opera type, the Prince of Wales crook shape, and a straight handle. Each is equally efficient in performing a really serviceable flashlight function, for the light rays, even when carried around a curve, are concentrated with full intensity at the end of the "Lucite" rod where they emerge.

Learn Amateur Play Producing

IT'S a lot of fun to join or organize a little theater group—make new friends with congenial, exciting interests. And amateur theatricals can be a valuable try-out for the one who cherishes serious stage or screen ambitions.

If you have learned something about acting and the theater beforehand, you have a real chance to shine in your group. On the great day of the play your performance looks and sounds professional. You enjoy the thrill of the biggest share of applause.

What are the differences between the inexperienced and the trained actor? You can easily detect them, master them with opportunity for practice.

The real actor, for instance, reads his lines in a natural way. He stresses the important words—never makes the amateurish mistake of giving equal emphasis to each word in a line, no matter how simple.

Such d e l i b e r a t e, uninflected reading slows a play—and so do uncalled-for waits between dialogue. Notice how quickly actors respond to each other in a movie or professional play and you'll see why such shows never drag as much as some amateur performances. So learn your cues, be alert to act on them.

For love scenes, rehearse often and well to be convincing. In comic scenes, avoid "riding" laughs. That is, starting the next speech while the audience is laughing at the last one.

As you study various phases of the theater, you may confirm your belief in your ability or find you have unsuspected talents. You may be on the road to become a star—or perhaps a director! (It has happened, many times.)

Send 15 cents in coins for our booklet, "How to Put on a Play," to The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address and the name of booklet.

Dining Aloft Makes Sky Travel a Pleasure

THE FIRST time I ate on an airplane it was a boxed lunch, consisting of three finger sandwiches, a big red apple, cookies and a thermos bottle of coffee that I poured myself—and right on myself, too. So while enjoying the meals served me in sky travel last week-end I noticed the marked contrast to that first eventful meal in the air.

At my recent air luncheon I ate bouillon, a refreshing shrimp salad, ripe olives, hot rolls and coffee. That's what I call a well-rounded, appetizing luncheon whether eaten in the air or on land. It could have been more rounded if I had included dessert, but that is not a luncheon food for me.

Our ship was sailing at great speed on our return trip, but I was so completely intrigued by my delicious dinner that before I believed it possible the lights of Washington were twinkling below. Here is the dinner that interested me:

Dinner Menu

Roast Chicken Wild Rice Stuffing
Green Beans Spring Salad
Hot Muffins
Strawberry Shortcake
Coffee

The shrimp salad served at luncheon was as imposing and as delicious as it could be if it were tossed in one's own kitchen. It reminded me that such a salad is one that should be served often. Here is my idea of a shrimp salad bowl, using the same ingredients that were included in the salad served on the plane.

Shrimp Salad Bowl

Shred 1 small head lettuce. Add 2 cupfuls shrimp, 1 cupful diced celery, ¼ cupful sliced stuffed olives, 1 small can artichoke hearts, ½ teaspoon salt and ⅛ teaspoon salt. Add 3 tablespoons French dressing, toss together to blend, and set aside for half hour. Arrange in a salad bowl, decorate with asparagus tips, fresh or canned, and pass the mayonnaise.

High Blood Pressure, Fat Are Linked

Proper Diet Will Help to Control Dangerous Ailment

By Ida Jean Kain

HIGH BLOOD pressure has been well defined as the most serious disease in American life today. It carries off 375,000 victims annually—three times the number who die from cancer.

The alarmingly high death toll is somewhat explained by the insidious character of the disease. So stealthily are its inroads made that the danger may not even be suspected. As pointed out by Dr. William J. Kerr, of San Francisco, in his recent address before the annual congress of the American College of Physicians: "There are many men, in business and professional life particularly, who are headed for the last round-up and who do not know it because they do not have any symptoms, except possibly a little shortness of breath in going uphill."

The Dangerous Decade

If he condescends to notice it at all, shortness of breath is usually a joking matter to the average man! But the common, predisposing causes of high blood pressure—general overweight coupled with abdominal girth, underexercise and tension—are so closely allied with its development that they might easily be construed as danger signals.

According to all the statistics, the average man begins to take his poor physical condition for granted somewhere between 40 and 50. It is very significant that the majority of cases of high blood pressure—which can develop at any age—occur between 40 and 50. It might also be taken as a warning by the man of that dangerous decade!

Treatment of high blood pressure consists primarily in health measures, such as weight reduction, mild exercise, rest. Reduction of the weight is so effective in lowering the blood pressure that it is now given first importance in treatment of cases in which there is obesity. Even a slight weight reduction sometimes decreases the abnormal pressure by as much as 50 per cent!

Elastic Belt Helps

For the treatment of circulatory and heart ailments, Dr. Kerr has found it very helpful to prescribe the use of an elastic belt to relieve pressure in the region of the diaphragm, enabling that overworked valve to perform more efficiently in returning the blood to the heart. The belt is especially beneficial in cases of obesity in which there is excessive abdominal girth.

That old theory about allowing "100 plus the age" for the blood pressure is all wrong, medical men have decided. In fact, they even frown on the rule of "100 plus the age minus 10." The normal range is from 110 to 135 for the average adult male.

Pockets Prevail On Summer Frocks

Gailey embroidered pockets add color to light summer sports frocks. Anna Neagle, movie star, selected a white linen dress trimmed with a pair of enormous patch pockets with button-down flaps. They're embroidered in cobalt blue, gold and bright red.

Even slash pockets can be edged or accented with embroidery or applique. In "Irene," Marsha Hunt wears a slim white wool jacket, the slash pockets accented by ornamental bands of black wool. Anne Shirley's newest dinner gown has slash pockets set into the panel of inverted pleats at front of skirt. Pockets are embroidered with white wool thread.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Man's Alleged Sadistic Mistreatment of His Daughter, Aged 10, Worries Grandmother; How Restrain Him?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am living temporarily with my daughter and her husband, who have one child, a bright little girl of 10. My question is: How to make life safer and happier for this girl, whose father nags her constantly. He drinks once in a while, and while he is bad enough at best, he is worse when drinking. At meals he spends the whole time scolding her about what she does or doesn't eat, how she eats, etc. He fills up her plate and orders her to eat it, even though it makes her sick sometimes.

One night he whipped her with two heavy sticks, raising long welts on her legs, because she got home at 5:32 instead of 5:30. At times he refuses to let her go to Sunday school because he wants her at hand where she can wait on his every little whim. Whenever she gets into some dangerous predicament, he jokingly says, "What of it? She is insured for $1,000." This seems to me a very poor joke.

All winter she slept in my room. A few nights ago when she was sick from enforced overeating I asked her to come along to bed. Her parents decided right then that she needed more air. So they moved her bed from my large, airy room into their small room where she must sleep in a draft under an open window. They keep the door locked, so I cannot get in to see if she is properly covered.

This condition had been going on for years before I came to live with them and I expect it will continue after I leave. Although my daughter and granddaughter seem to like the man, they are afraid to call their names their own when he is around. I think he is jealous of me; but if he would treat his child with a little common sense, he would have no reason to be jealous. Scolding and slapping and nagging her seems to be a mania with him. What can be done about it? (Incidentally, I have a small allowance from my son, and am not dependent upon my son-in-law for support. GRANDMOTHER.

Child Protective Agency Checks Such Complaints

DEAR GRANDMOTHER: If the man's neurotic mistreatment of his daughter is so severe as to be manifestly detrimental to her mental and physical health, the case should be brought to the attention of the Children's Protective Association, at 1907 S street northwest; telephone Dupont 7373.

Supposing it could be proved that the child is a chronic victim of inhuman parental abuse, steps might be taken to commit her to other guardianship. But courts are reluctant, as a rule, to separate a child from its parents, and do so only when confronted with weighty evidence that such a move is absolutely essential to the youngster's well being.

The "next friend" (to employ a legal phrase), who undertakes to rescue a child from unreasoning parental persecution must be prepared to carry his point with grim determination, absolute unselfishness of motive, intelligent objectivity and considerable resourcefulness. He must have evidence to prove a cleancut case against the accused; since, if he fails to do so, he places himself under suspicion of being a busybody or emotionally biased trouble maker.

The child's testimony would go far toward shaping the final disposition of such a case, and since your granddaughter seems (so you say) devoted to her father in spite of his nerve-racking and sometimes even brutal behavior, it is questionable whether she could be counted on to abet you in any efforts to "crack down on him" by legal means.

Also, your championship of your granddaughter against her father is somewhat discredited—at least at first glance—by the fact that your daughter, apparently, is allied with him in opposition to your well-meant intervention. This, of course, could be due to fear of offending him and incurring his cruel displeasure; as well as to her sense of helpless financial dependence upon him, as a means of livelihood for herself and the child. But it might mean, on the other hand, that she holds you guilty of an obsessively sentimental desire to mollycoddle the little girl; that she thinks the father's sadistic harshness potentially less harmful to the child, in the long run, than your indulgent ministrations might prove to be.

In all sincerity, I submit that I deplore as much as you do the manner in which the child is being reared. And again I say, if the situation is exactly as described—or even worse—you would be warranted in bringing it to the attention to the social agency aforementioned. But if your efforts to change the picture are balked, then you just must console yourself with the thought if she has survived this far—to be a "bright," affectionate, temperamentally resilient creature—the chances are good that she will do as well for herself during the next decade.

In the meantime, keep her in your heart. Let her know that you are her steadfast friend, whenever she needs counsel, love and understanding. And DON'T belabor her with gratuitious pity-for-her-plight, since she needs to be sustained in gallantry, rather than encouraged to feel sorry for herself. M. H.

Today's Health Talk

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

What are the dangers and treatment of irregular heart action?

Few children live beyond the age of 5 without having some irregularity of the heart.

The form of irregularity found in young people is respiratory irregularity, in which there is a rhythmic slowing and acceleration of the pulse occurring with inspiration and expiration. It may be brought out with forced breathing, especially when lying down.

It can be noticed up to the age of 16 or a little past. It is practically never found in those over 20. A valuable sign is that it disappears when infection is present. If this respiratory irregularity comes on after an attack of rheumatic fever, it is an indication that all effects of infection have subsided and it is safe to allow the paient to sit up. Thus an irregular pulse may be a good thing.

Few people, again, live from the age of 40 to 60 without having a form of irregularity of the heart which they can feel. It comes in the form of a dropped beat. They say, "My heart feels as if it had turned over," or, "My heart stops and seems to stand still for a short time." It is noticeable that this bothers most when the patient is quiet, especially after he has retired for the evening before going to sleep.

Although this condition frightens the owner, it is usually of no significance or seriousness. It is probably due to an irritable heart and may be brought on by stimulants such as tobacco or alcohol.

Dressmaker Effect in Style For Upholstery

Fashionable Mode Easily Achieved For Slip Covers

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

DRESSMAKER effects are fashionable for nailed-on upholstery coverings as well as for slip covers. These are achieved in versatile ways—by the use of channel backs, novelty tufting (often overscale), fringed and corded seams, skirts to the floor.

For the skirts of your furniture covers bear the style responsibility this season. The skirts that are newest, for both permanent furniture covers and the removable types, have gathered flounces, straight flounces with corner kick pleats, straight skirts with peplums, straight skirts with swags or festoons.

The silhouettes of upholstered furniture are trim and slender; if you have fat overstuffed pieces use them only if you must . . . they're out as far as fashion is concerned. The lighter slimmer upholstered pieces have just as much comfort, take up less space, are easier to move around, have more style. The only exception to this is the enormous hassock, made to seat three or four and designed as a centerpiece for a room. Large sofas are often made of sectional units that can be used as separate chairs when desired.

The upholstery fabrics that are most favored have either suave or smooth surfaces or else modern textures. In short, the old-style of heavy materials don't have so much lure now as the leathers, satins, raw silks, hand-woven textures and novelty variations of old weaves.

In planning to do over upholstered furniture, it is well to recognize at the start just what you can and can't do. As far as a permanent nailed-on upholstery cover is concerned, you can do a very presentable job if you stick to simple types and only attempt a recovery proposition.

We never advise that a woman try to do much about fallen insides or buckling springs in upholstered furniture; that's a man's job and an expert's job. Otherwise we an expert's job. Likewise we tufting or channel backs can be achieved by the amateurs. What you can do is put on a plain smart new cover—if you're willing to follow the rules.

A Woman's New York

College Girls Aspire to Jobs On Newspapers

New York, April 28,

"IF AS many jobs as flowers bloomed in the spring," said Franklin D. Hall, homemaker for the above scribe, as he darned away merrily at his spare socks, "what a happy city this would be, indeed."

ALICE HUGHES

This thought hit me with extra force last week because, by some odd error of judgment, a group of students at the Columbia School of Journalism summoned me to the campus to interview me on the subject of motion picture criticism and comment—an odd trade I have followed since the Spanish-American War. It is old hat for me to cross-examine such dream folk as Merle Oberon or Mae West, or Charlie Boyer (Chuck to his pals), but to be bombarded by a roomful of attractive young ladies is another horse, believe me.

I knew what would happen, and of course it did. After I had been introduced all around by two charming girls named Hope Kimbrough and Grace Piper, I was faced with usual routine queries about writing pieces on the films, but they all led up to the one big question of every spring—"And how do we break in?" That problem faces thousands of bright and ardent kids on campuses just now and it is as unanswerable as the old gag about how old is Ann?

All these girls, completing two years of postgraduate study of the newspaper business, now face it. Obviously, they want jobs on newspapers (a prevalent type of wackiness, some old-timers feel), and both newspapers and jobs on them are scarcer than they have ever been. I couldn't give them any concrete help, any more than I could the mass of stage-struck girls who used to ask me for advice during my years as a dramatic critic.

This job business for alert, and sometimes brilliant, girls and boys is a real vernal terror, and is probably worse these days even than it was when we got out of the army in '19.

SPOUSE ABOUT TOWN—The family has been forced into a lot of socializing lately. One night last week madame and I went to an evening party in honor of Dorothy Leibes, the San Francisco textile queen and general art expert. One of the guests was Mrs. Emily Joseph, an art patron and critic of the same town. She told us two of her favorite coined words. One is "thwarfs," which means suffering from thwarting and frustration, and the other is "illth," referring to one suffering from ill health. Great help in streamlining the lingo, no doubt.

In fact, it has been a sort of California week, because Leola Harlow, who reads the piece in Oakwood, wrote us that she and her Spanish-dance partner, Irene Alonso, and their concert pianist, Esther Williamson, were coming East—and sure enough they did. Since the program Leola inclosed showed them to be most attractive young ladies, I rashly appointed myself official family greeter, and took them to tea, or something. Oh, of course the madame tagged along, drat, I mean bless, her little heart.

POSTLUDE

By Ray C. B. Brown

King-Smith Studio School presents Gertrude Austin and Martha Poncy in a recital of music for two pianos Sunday afternoon in Phillips Memorial Gallery. Program: Concerto Grosso (Handel), Fantasia in F minor (Schubert), Piere in B minor (Guy Ropartz), "Scaramouche" (Darius Milhaud).

A friendly and interested audience filled Phillips Memorial Gallery yesterday afternoon for the two-piano recital by Gertrude Austin and Martha Poncy, who are making definite progress in one of the most exacting collaborations. It would seem to be a simple matter for two pianists to adapt their idiosyncrasies to a composite style, but the rarity of perfect piano teams testifies to the difficulty of that adjustment. These young resident musicians, who first essayed a public performance together last season, are on the right road. Their consentience in interpretation is already marked, and their synchronization is more accurate than before.

BROWN

The literature for duo-pianists is by no means as limited as is commonly supposed or as the repertoire of the more famous teams would indicate. Miss Austin and Mlle. Poncy prepared a program that displayed in the course of an hour examples of the classical, romantic and contemporary manners. Two of the compositions were arnagements for the twin keyboards, and two were originally written in that medium.

A concerto by Handel suffered a considerable reduction of sonority by the process of transcription, but retained all its essential qualities. In the case of Schubert's fantasie in F minor, there was some expansion of the original version for four hands at one instrument, and a gain in expressive tone color. Both these works were played with technical adroitness and with a sense of the respective styles.

Naturally, the most intriguing part of the program was concerned with music composed expressely for the tonal combinations latent in two pianos. The Piece in B minor by Guy Ropartz has a beauty derived from its spiritual equality, and that in turn is related to the unworldliness of Cesar Franck, who wielded more influence upon Ropartz than did his other teachers, Dubois and Massenet. The principal theme is in the very idiom of Franck, and the development has a serenity and a meditative richness that reward the listener.

Darius Milhaud's brilliant "Scaramouche" is a new work heard here for the first time. Witty and lightly satirical, it deals ideationally with a stock character in seventeenth century Italian farce, Scaramuccia, whose fate it was to be beaten by Harlequin for his boasting and cowardice. In the three movements of the suit, the play of humor is continual, and the fun is emphasized by the occasional spice of polytonality in the harmonic fabric. The writing is scintillant and remarkably resourceful in elaborating simple themes. The last movement, particularly effective in its zest and sparkle, has the rhythm of a samba, a native Brazilian dance.

West Virginia Dance Will Be Tomorrow

Red Cross Service To Hunt Missing Persons in Norway

The Red Cross Inquiry Service will extend its operations to Norway, it was announced yesterday by Ernest J. Swift, vice chairman in charge of foreign operations.

The service, inaugurated eight months ago, has thus far cleared about 23,000 inquiries, Swift said, with almost 5,000, or 22 per cent of them, receiving answers. Most of the inquiries have come from Americans for foreign birth seeking missing persons in Poland and Finland.

The Norwegian Red Cross Society will cooperate with the International Red Cross Committee at Geneva through which the queries are routed, it was said, and a large number of inquiries are expected from persons of Norwegian descent in this country.

Judge Hunt Is Author

Former Judge Henry Hunt, 3d, now in charge of automobile assessments at Rockville, Md., was revealed as the author of a book of verse this week by a printed announcement sent out by his publishers, Avon House.

Judge Hunt, who has been a colorful figure in the political and social life of Montgomery County, Md., is the only male member of his family since the Revolution who has not served in the military forces of the United States.

At 22 he was stricken with infantile paralysis and though an invalid since, served as postmaster at Bethesda, Md., through most of the Wilson Administration, is a former member of the Board of Montgomery County Commissioners, served three terms as judge of the Montgomery County Orphans Court and was active in the David J. Lewis primary fight.

Until recently he went hunting in his wheel chair, firing at his game from the chair. He also was interested in sports generally. The judge's greatest hobby has been his verse, however. Some of his verse has won prizes and a number of his verses have been published in newspapers and in books of verse.

The volume which now is to be issued is his first complete book of verse, however. It is entitled "The Human Touch."

Students Campaigning

"The whole place is going to wrack and ruin if you don't vote our ticket. If you vote right, we'll—" No, it isn't the county election that is causing such a ferment amongst the ninth graders at Leland Junior High School in Chevy Chase, Md. It's the red hot school election that is scheduled for today.

All the panorama of the big-time campaign is present though, posters, lapel buttons, political promises and platforms, and it is rumored that even a few ice cream sodas and candy bars have changed hands but the Gillette Committee probably won't get in on it.

The ninth graders are electing officers for the coming year and at Forty-fourth and Elm streets, Chevy Chase, the outcome is just as important as the Bruce-Radcliffe race.

Three parties have been formed, the Popular, the Band Wagon and the Pine Cone, the latter supported by the school paper which is the—you guessed it—"The Pine Cone."

The candidates follow: for president—Dick Lansdale, Pine Cone; Claxton Walker, Popular; David Toll, Bandwagon; for vice president—Elizabeth A. Smith, Pine Cone; Marian Brackett, Popular, and Ruth Small, Bandwagon; for secretary—Jean Rubey, Pine Cone; Carter Dawson, Popular, and Barbara Hashagen, Bandwagon; for treasurer—Ann Ginsburgh, Pine Cone; Bill Schenke, Popular, and Harry Phillips, Bandwagon; for sergeant at arms—Domond Roberts, Pine Cone; Dave Pitzgerald, Popular, and Bob Brewer, Bandwagon; for parliamentarian—Virginia Wilson, Pine Cone; Jean Willoughby, Popular, and Leonard Williams, Bandwagon.

Bookstalls Are Raided By the Warner Brothers

Best-Sellers Rounded Up for Picturization; New National Subscription Season Opens Soon; This, That and the Other About the Theater

YEARS AGO, when the Warner Brothers were still independent producers and before they had acquired control of the Stanley Co. of America—and thereby of the First National producing and distributing organization—they devoted one season's production almost entirely to the then best-selling novels. For the forthcoming season they seem, more or less, to have resurrected that largely successful policy.

BELL

Their most recent best-seller acquisitions are "Mr. Skeffington," by Elizabeth, a current Book-of-the-Month Club selection, and "King's Row," by Henry Bellamann, a Middle Western saga of the horse-and-buggy era.

Among other valuable book properties the Warners have purchased for picturization are the spectacular sea epics, "Capt. Horatio Hornblower," by C. S. Forrester, and "John Paul Jones," by Clement Ripley, this latter item to star Jimmy Cagney. Still others include "High Sierra," by W. R. Burnett, for Paul Muni; "Danger Signal," by Phyllis Bottome, to star Bette Davis; "City for Conquest," by Aben Kandel, another Cagney vehicle; Margaret Kennedy's "The Constant Nymph," and W. Somerset Maugham's "The House on the Hill," for Merle Oberon—unless Marlene Dietrich barges into the hill house—"The Letter," another Maugham story, played on the stage by Katharine Cornell and planned for Bette Davis before the cameras; "Quietly My Captain Waits," a novel of Canada in the romantic 1600's, by "Evelyn Eaton; "War of the Copper Kings," by C. B. Glasscock; "January Heights," by Polan Banks; Charles Kaufman's "Fiesta in Manhattan," for John Garfield; "The Full Life," by Melchior Langyel; "Frontier Doctor," by Urling C. Coe, another for Mr. Muni, and "All This and Heaven Too," which Bette Davis and Charles Boyer already have completed.

A question might be raised as to whether Harry, Jack and Abe are picture producers or librarians.

The name of that picture Frank Lloyd and his acting company have been shooting down at Williamsburg, Va., under the working title of "The Tree of Liberty," has been changed to "The Howards of Virginia." Jack Cohn, executive vice president of Columbia, paged the motion picture critics of the country for a new title, fearing that "Tree of Liberty" was not A-1 boxoffice. The new title that was chosen as best was submitted by J. Willis Sayre, of the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Speaking of the Book-of-the-Month Club and Columbia Pictures, Osa Johnson's story of her life with her late husband, the world-famous photographer-explorer, Martin Johnson, will be a forthcoming club selection. The publication of the book will precede the motion picture by the same name, being rushed to completion by Columbia.

There is nothing static about the management of the Mount Vernon Open Air Theater, on the Richmond highway a few miles below Alexandria, Va. Charles Munro, this season's erstwhile manager, already has left for a new post in the Boston office of E. M. Loew and has been succeeded by "Mac" Goldstein, formerly manager of Mr. Loew's Modern Theater, in Marlboro, Mass.

With last week's stupendously successful engagement of Robert E. Sherwood's "There Shall Be No Night," the 1939-40 subscription season of the Theater Guild-American Theater Society came to a close at the National Theater. The subscription season opened with the Lunts in their "outrageous production" of Shakespeare's "The Taming of the Shrew" and closed with their superb performances in the new Sherwood play. It also included Ethel Barrymore in "The Farm of Three Echoes;" "Outward Bound," with Laurette Taylor and Florence Reed; Paul Vincent Carroll's "The White Steed," with Whitford Kane," and Tallulah Bankhead in Lillian Hellman's "The Little Foxes"—a right sturdy group, all in all. Subscription blanks for 1940-41 will be available sometime between May 10 and 15. In the meantime, those desiring to retain their present seat locations for next season may send in their orders to the Guild office in the National Theater, where they will be filed, pending receipt of the new blanks from Guild headquarters in New York.

"There Shall Be No Night," incidentally, played to the complete capacity of the National Theater at every performance last week. Gross receipts ran in excess of $25,000 and probably would have hit the $30,000 mark had not such a vast number of the Theater Guild-American Theater Society clientele secured their seats at the reduced subscription scale. Mr. Lunt and Miss Fontanne informed your reporter in a pleasant backstage visit Friday night that a phone call from "Bob" Sherwood that day had advised them that the Alvin Theater, in New York, already is sold out for the first two weeks of the Broadway engagement, opening tonight. And were they elated!

among the foremost of the cinema's serio-comic actresses, as she appears in "Too Many Husbands," Columbia release, returning Friday to the screen at the Warner Brothers' Metropolitan Theater. The Trans-Lux Fully Covers World Events

Both Hemispheres Are Pictured on Screen At Newsreel House

Since the news is largely war, it is mostly war and surrounding events at the Trans-Lux Theater for the current week. Brave Rumania is pictured as she arms to the last man, while the British suicide fleet is shown in action and the well-trained Swedish army and navy show themselves to be ready for any emergency. As Canada's Prime Minister holds a roadside chat with President Roosevelt at Warm Springs, Ga., the Queen's own Canadian Highlanders pass in their last full dress parade.

On the home "front" comes the startling disclosure by Chairman Dies of the "Trojan Horse" plots fomented in the United States. The tragic train wreck at Little Falls, N. Y., is given good space as are the flood-covered areas both in the United States and Buenos Aires. Dust bowl area farmers, who were forced to evacuate in 1938, are shown returning to their farms, while the New York World Fair grounds are seething with action for the May opening. Secretary Edison returns from the fleet maneuvers, while the south Spanish exiles still stay close to Mexico, where the air corps goes into formation practice.

Sports Have Innings

For sports the Yankee's opening game is held over; Max Baer and Tony Galento are shown training for their forthcoming fight; Big Bill Tilden opens a tennis school in California, with plenty of movie stars present; California stages its first English fox hunt and the University of Illinois' gymnasts do their stuff. Lew Lehr stages a riot in men's fashions.

The ancient and modern beauty of Buenos Aires and the gorgeous surrounding countryside of romantic Argentina forms the travelog of the week while for a contrasting short you are introduced to many of the cartoonists who draw your favorite funnies, in "Making the Funnies."

Harlequins Score Again in Cohan Musical

Arlene Judge Flies From New York to See Collegians' Show

By Richard L. Coe.

When he saw his life story and heard his songs as the inspiration for "Yankee Doodle Boy," a student-produced comedy at Catholic University four months ago, George M. Cohan called it his "greatest night in the American theater." Last evening the Harlequins revived their four-star hit for a run of six nights before an audience which included pert film star Arline Judge.

Solely to see the Harlequins' musical biography, Miss Judge had planed down from New York for the evening, on the advice of the original "Yankee Doodle Boy," turned drama critic. A long-time friend and admirer of both Mr. Cohan and Father Gilbert V. Hartke, director of the university's speech and drama department, the slight brunette player exclaimed happily over the youthful show, its well-loved tunes, and brightly gave thanks to the aerial progress which had made her evening possible.

Performances Are Smoother

What Miss Judge saw was a musical that, not unnaturally, was in even better trim than when Mr. Cohan made his grateful remark. Mr. Cohan, who opens tonight at the National Theater in his own new play, "The Return of the Vagabond" (preparations for which prevented his attending), could have told white-gowned Miss Judge and the well-dressed full house last night that James Graham's Georgie had bettered his already adequate song-and-dance ability and that Margaret Mary Edmonston was still a "wow" as his song-chanting mother.

This Miss Edmonston is a particularly appealing performer. She has a fine flair for putting over a comic song and an electrifying assurance which won her a wholehearted ovation from the audience Her song, "Small Town Boy," and her contributions to the ensuing "Harrigan" gave the first act a bang-up finale.

An All-Hit Score

Walter Kerr, of the department's faculty, and Leo Brady, of the student body, have written a biography which is tied together with some 22 from among the songs Cohan has written through the years. "Always Leave Them Laughing When You Say Goodbye," "I Guess I'll Have to Telegraphy My Baby," "When We Are M-A-double R-I-E-D," "It's a Grand Old Flag" and "Over There" are only a few of those whistling exercises. The story begins with 3-month-old Georgie popping out of a backstage trunk waving the flag. It traces the rise of the Four Cohans and his growth from a conceited youngster into a mellowed star who is scared to death at the idea of playing Franklin D. Roosevelt in "I'd Rather Be Right."

All of this the Harlequins have staged, under the direction of Mr. Kerr and Dr. Josephine McGarry Callan, with zest and smoothness. The settings, designed by Ralph Brown, are amusing and well-adapted to the episodic character of the 17 scenes. Mary Ann La Covis has had a costumer's field day with an assignment that bridges the years from 1878 to 1939.

Graham's Cohan Likeable

Freshman Jimmy Graham, while unlike the star in physical appearance, makes his Georgie a likeable chap, putting over his songs with not too much attempt to be Cohanesque and scoring his greatest hit with his imitation of G. M. C. imitating President Roosevelt, which is funnier than it is involved.

Little Beverly M. Stubbs, whose years, or lack of them, would prohibit her appearance on the local professional stage, very nearly steals the show with her interest in hearing Georgie tell her "Mary's a Grand Old Name." Pretty Marion Walberg's dancing, as sister Josie, and Paul Tisdale's Hibernian father, Jerry, are likeable, too. Kathleen Keliher and Arigo Martini have good assignments as the lovers who sing of "Venus."

Others in the large cast, the feminine contingent of which was drawn from the allied colleges of Trinity, Immaculata and Dunbarton, include Frank Borden, Bernard Borden, Bernard Cody, Kay Becker, Frank Spitzig and Ed Doherty.

Gayety

"MELODY REVUE." The Independent Burlesque Association presents the musical production in two acts and 18 scenes featuring Geral Dean, supported by Irving Karo, Dorothy DeHaven, Sammy Smith, Bert Saunders, Vickie Welles, Pepper Asner, Lorette Montez, Shorty McAllister, Harry Fields and Lititia. Dance numbers devised by Frank Bryant; staged by James J. Lake. Reviewed Sunday matinee by Art John.

This week's gala revue at the Gayety Theater lays particular emphasis upon pretty girls. The comedy, it's true, is funny; the music and dancing above par, but the unfair sex reigns supreme.

Geral Dean, tall, pretty and blonde is the featured headliner. Miss Dean is making her initial appearance here, after a long and successful season in New York, and her musical specialty is nicely presented, although it is much too short.

Vickie Welles, a charming, titian-haired miss, and the dark-eyed and lovely Loretta Montez, add prestige to the distaff portion of the bill. Miss Welles, in particular, appears in several musical routines wearing some very colorful and provocative costumes.

The comedy portion of the bill is dedicated to the witty antics of Harry Fields, Sammy Smith and Shorty McAllister, ably assisted by Bert Saunders and Dorothy DeHaven. Their efforts are, for the most part, amusing and effective, although one or two of the skits could be shortened without loss of punch.

Lititia and Pepper Asner contribute some worthwhile dance numbers to the revue. The former is an excellent ballet dancer, while the latter offers several tap routines and presents a musical specialty with the drums in regular Krupa fashion. Irving Karo possesses the best singing voice in burlesque and has fine arrangements of "All the Things You Are" and "Wishing on a Star."

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, April 28 (INS). Bill Shakespeare must have had some of these studio battles in mind when he wrote "All's Well That Ends Well." Olivia de Havilland, who was suspended by her studio, is not only back in good standing but has been elevated to stardom by Jack Warner who feels she deserves it. Her first starring vehicle will be "Annabel Lee."

LOUELLA PARSONS

Jack, with whom I talked just before we both left for the William Randolph Hearst birthday party said, "I give Olivia credit for her performance as Melanie in 'Gone With The Wind' and naturally we are anxious to follow that up with equally fine roles." Come to think of it, the role of Annabel Lee, child wife of the unhappy Edgar Allen Poe, has many of the same heart appealing qualities as Melanie. Jeffrey Lynn is already set for the Poe role and Donald Crisp and Brenda Marshall have supporting parts in Tom Reed's story, based on the life of the tragic American poet.

It will be a reunion in the Mohawk Valley when Claudette Colbert and Henry Fonda get together again for "Chad Hanna," the Walter D. Edmonds novel, for which Darryl Zanuck just planked out $50,000. I didn't read this yarn of the early circus days when it first appeared in a national magazine under the title of "Red Wheels Rolling," but it has the same background of Edmond's other screen opus, "Drums Along The Mohawk," which Claudette and Hank made last year. Interesting to hear that John Ford will megaphone "Chad Hanna" as soon as he finishes "How Green Was My Valley" and a jaunt to Wales for authentic background shots—unless the war gets worse, of course.

Universal bosses are convinced that good old rip-roaring action movies are what the fans want now—not sad dramas, or war tragedies. So they are really putting a bankroll behind "A Modern Monte Cristo," which is all about the South African Diamond mines. So far, Victor McLaglen is the only star cast in one of the three top spots and Margaret Lindsay is expected to sign for the femme lead. The story, an original by Edmund Hartmann and Stanley Rubin, will be shoved ahead of several other pictures, starting within two weeks.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Eric Blore frightened cast and crew on "The Boys From Syracuse" set out of their wits last Friday when he collapsed. He was sent home for a few days rest; Jimmie Manett, formerly Marion Davies' still cameraman, now at M-G-M, welcoming a son; Edna Best getting her first glimpse of an American baseball game, watching the Hollywood stars. Her bridegroom, Nat Wolfe, explaining all the fine points; Jock Lawrence; we are glad to report, is well after a long illness and returned to his desk at Goldwyn studio last week; Hal Roach is hosting a supper dance Tuesday night at his home, following the preview of "Turn About."

Ruth Foran (Mrs. Dick) in the hospital for observation; Matty Melnick received a royal welcome at the Beverly Wilshire where he and his grand orchestra are playing; Charlie Feldman celebrated his birthday there and he was called off the floor so a messenger boy could sing happy birthday; the annual Twentieth Century-Fox studio soiree was held Saturday night at Earl Carroll's. At the Zanuck table were Tyrone Power and his Annabella, Constance Bennett and her boy friend, Richard Ainley, the William Goetzes, Hedy Lamarr and Gene Markey and Don Ameche. Mrs. Ameche is still in the hospital

Jeanette MacDonald had all our best singer to hear her concert at the philharmonic. Irene, Dunne, Mary Martin, Allan Jones, Marion Talley among those who applauded her; the three Seiter children—Christopher Nixon, Selina and Jessica Ellen will be christened Sunday in the Westwood Community Church. Three sets of godparents will be on hand. Glen Tryon and Mrs. Richard Wallace for Chris, John Stahl and Alyce Mills Davey for Selina and Reginald Denny and Mrs. Mathew Lasher for little Jessica; Anatole Litvak and Miriam Hopkins dining tete-a-tete at the little Hungary; sitting nearby were Merle Oberon and Alexander Korda; George Fitzmaurice is reported much better at the Good Samaritan Hospital where he has been for a few weeks; talked with Lionel Barrymore just before he went home from the hospital and he looks wonderful.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Hollywood, April 28.

Shirley Temple celebrated her eleventh birthday last Saturday, and many people are wondering if she will be at Twentieth-Fox Studios when her twelfth birthday rolls around. I don't believe so. Her parents have been very wise in handling Shirley, and I see no reason why they should change their tactics now. She has a trust fund of nearly a million dollars, so doesn't need the money, and two or three years of school and play will be good for her. Then she'll be ready for another career—because the kid can act. If you'll remember, she came into the spotlight at the depth of our depression. She was a happy, smiling child and that had a psychological effect on audiences.

Nats Again Beat Yanks, 3-2, for Fifth Straight

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

If the Red Sox aren't cussing themselves, they should. Whatever chances they have for the pennant they are muffing in a grand manner. The time to gain ground on the Yankees is now, when the Yanks are operating without Joe DiMaggio, and what have the Red Sox done about it?

POVICH

The season is now nine days old and where are the Red Sox? Only two and a half games ahead of the Yankees. As opportunists, the Boston club is a dud, so far. Without DiMaggio, the Yankees are floundering in the second division and they will be without DiMaggio for a month. If, at the end of that period, the Red Sox can't show a substantial lead, they're sunk as surely as the Titanic.

Because when DiMaggio gets back in the Yankee lineup, it will be a different Yankee team. That big Italian is the Yankee team, for all that may be said about Bill Dickey, Charley Keller and Joe McCarthy's swell infield. Without DiMag, the Yanks are just another ball club. That has been strikingly demonstrated in the first ten day of the race.

DiMaggio's presence will break up that array of five left-handed hitters batting consecutively in the Yankee's lineup. And it will break up with a bang. It will put the pressure on those pitchers that have been beating the Yankees and revelling in DiMaggio's absence. It isn't going too far to venture that the Yankees would have won four of the first five games they lost, if DiMaggio had been in there swinging for 'em.

One of the secrets of the amazing success of the Yankees is the fact that they can instill the jitters in the opposing club. Not only the pitchers but the infielders and outfielders are under pressure when DiMaggio takes his copyrighted stance at the plate. With DiMaggio awaiting his turn at bat, such as Red Rolfe and Charley Keller, who precede him, take on a more menacing aspect.

And after pitchers bear down against DiMaggio, as they must, they must face Bill Dickey. They haven't had any breathing spell. But with DiMaggio out of there the Yankee threat is far more mild. If you don't think pitchers feel the pressure when facing the Yankee batting order, check up some time on the wild pitches made in the American League. More wild pitches are made against the Yanks than against any other club. Why? Because pitchers are trying to be too careful, trying to pitch too fine to the Yanks. They tighten up.

DiMaggio, you remember, is the batting champion of the American League. That kind of a hitter never hurt any batting order. If he has a batting weakness, it has never been discovered. Of other hitters it can be said that he doesn't like a low ball outside, or a high ball inside, or a curve here or there, but DiMaggio doesn't have much preference. The pitcher's in a hole when DiMag is at bat.

Unlike the Red Sox, the Cleveland Indians are making capital of DiMaggio's absence by winning their early ball games. Every game that the Red Sox lose while the Yanks are without DiMag is so much found for the Yankees, because when the big guy gets back in the lineup the Yanks are going to thunder toward the top.

Before the start of the season there was a concerted rush aboard the Charley Keller and Ted Williams bandwagons. They were the two fellows who were going to beat out DiMaggio for the batting championship, it was predicted. That theory was ridiculed yesterday by a member of the Yankees. Goofy Gomez, who is about as goofy as a fox, was talking hitters:

"That Williams is a swell hitter. He's got it. So has Charley Keller. It's a tight fit between 'em. I wouldn't want to bet that Williams would outhit Keller. But I've got my own champion. Joe DiMaggio is the best hitter in the league. Nobody's ever going to win that batting championship from Joe. Any time a pitcher gets him out, the pitcher is lucky.

It is not exactly startling to note that the league-leading hitter in the American League at this writing is chunky Taft Wright, of the White Sox. Whatever may be said about Wright's fielding, and on that score he could never be libeled, folks around the league have known now for two years that Wright is one of the best hitters in it.

The Nats knew it when they traded him to Chicago for Gerald Walker. They conceded the fact that he would probably have a better average than Walker. They simply were fed up with his fielding. It was even money that Wright would either catch a fly ball or fracture his skull in the attempt.

There's nothing particularly stylish about Wright's batting stroke. He simply stands up there and defies the pitcher to throw one past him. All kinds of hits bounce off his bat—line drives, dunkers, and left-field slices. But the hits that may look lucky come to Wright for one very good reason—he always gets a piece of that ball. You can say that only about a good hitter.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, April 28.—This is a little early to be viewing with alarm the 1940 performances of the New York Yankees. But just the same, they have shown only rare flashes of being the team that caused old Connie Mack to turn a cartwheel not long back. To date, they have been a middle-class combination, with none of the zing and none of the opportunism that made them fabulous.

CONSIDINE

Saturday they were given ten walks by young Ken Chase of the Senators, but listlessly lost the game 3-2. Twice this year they have been beaten by Chubby Dean, who up till then had never pitched nine innings in succession in the big leagues. The Red Sox plastered them.

Of course the Yanks have been known to trail until as deep in the season as July 4. Two years ago—the year when Mack and many others eventually decided that it was the greatest ball club of all time—it ate a lot of dust from the Cleveland Indians until firecracker time. The year before that, the Athletics were leading it at the end of May. Last year it had its lead cut from 11 games to six in three days by the Red Sox. But even in those crisis, the club rarely looked uninspired or unsure of itself.

One trouble with it so far this season is that it is feeling the pinch of the blockade imposed upon it at the instigation of Clark Griffith last winter at the annual meeting of the moguls. With Griff taking the lead, the American League owners rushed through an amendment to the league constitution whereby the defending champion, to wit, the Yanks, would not be permitted to make a deal with another club in the league for a year after winning the pennant.

Right now the Yanks need a first-class, experienced outfielder. Joe DiMaggio, who has paced the champions to four straight titles, is out for an indefinite period. He thinks it may be as much as a month. Jake Powell was hurt much worse than generally realized. He has been sent to Florida to recuperate, but Dr. Robert Emmet Walsh, the Yankee physician, will be surprised if he's able to play before July.

If anything happens to Keller, Selkirk or Henrich, the Yanks will have to bring up an unschooled rookie to fill in. For it's a cinch that the seven other American League owners are not going to waive their constitutional priority claims on any American League outfielder whose team wants to market him.

Lee Grisson successfully ran the blockade and reached Yankee shores after Griff's encirclement plan went into operation. But Grissom was a kind of a tramp steamer. The National League didn't want him—not even the Phillies. And the seven teams of the American League who could have claimed him before the Yanks had a chance to do it, enthusiastically passed him up. But that was Grissom, whose chances of making good this season are remote.

You know that if, for instance, the A's put Bob Johnson on the waiver list, or the Tigers put young McCoskey on the same—as a kind of a lure to see which teams were interested in them (so that a trade negotiation might open)—all the other clubs would clamor for them, to keep the Yankees from getting this kind of a replacement. In other words, the American League clubs are going to see to it that the blockade is enforced. As far as possible, they are going to force dry rot on the champs.

The affinity between Yankee superiority and Joe DiMaggio grows more sharply defined as the years go on. The team's fabulous streak of pennant winning began the year he joined the team. As Lou Gehrig said before the start of the season, the Yanks need him especially, for he is part of that axis that runs from Dickey to the centerfield flagpole. The most important part.

51,659 Fans See Game; Homer Helps

Circuit Blow By Dolf Camilli In Ninth Settles Errorless Play

By the Associated Press

New York, April 28.—The hottest team in baseball, Brooklyn's dauntless Dodgers, burned the New York Giants to a 5-to-3 crisp today before 51,659 fans, who packed the Polo Grounds to the rafters.

It was a warm, sunny day, and a ding-dong battle as good as any the famous cross-town rivalry has ever produced, so the crowd, predominently interested in the Dodgers in spite of the game being on the Giants' home grounds, was well satisfied.

But Brooklyn's eighth straight triumph was a bitter dose for the Giants, who had their batting order shaken up before the game and managed to outhit their foe.

Camilli Homers

A home run in the ninth inning by Dolph Camilli, scoring Cookie Lavagetto, who had opened the inning with a walk, decided the game.

Otherwise there wasn't much to choose. Whitlow Wyatt, in winning his second decision, allowed the Giants ten hits, while Harry Gumbert gave up eight.

Pete Coscarart homered behind Dixie Walker's single in the sixth to contribute to the Dodgers' cause and Master Mel Ott, of the Giants, notched his second circuit blow of hte season in the fifth for New York.

Errorless Game

Both teams played errorless and often spectacular ball.

It was the kind of close game that indomitable spirit decides and the Dodgers had it, even when the Giants looked stronger.

The Terrymen tallied in the second on Babe Young's double and Billy Jurges' single and Brooklyn bounced right back in the third with a run on Peewee Reese's single, an infield out and a smashing double to right by Walker.

Indians Win On Trosky's 2-Run Homer

Take 11-to-9 Game After Tigers Score Six in 9th Inning

By the Associated Press

Detroit, April 28.—Hal Trosky's tenth-inning homer with Ben Chapman on base gave the league-leading Cleveland Indians an 11-to-9 victory over the Detroit Tigers today after a "country fair" ball game in which the losers staged a six-run uprising in the ninth to tie the score and used 17 players in a futile effort to win.

The triumph, witnessed by a crowd of 30,200, enabled the Tribesmen to remain a game up on the Boston Red Sox in the American League standings.

Trosky's drive, fifth homer of the game, came with two men out, the ball sailing into the upper right-field stands.

After pounding Lynwood Rowe, Archie McKain, John Gorsica and Dick Conger, the Indians went into the last of the ninth in front, 9 to 3, only to see the big lead wilt. Barney McCosky's second homer of the day featured the uprising. Al Milnar, starting Indian pitcher, and Johnny Humphries and Bill Zuber went to the showers before Lefty Al Smith came in to retire the side.

Hains Point Races Open Washington Sailing Season

Fitful Winds Mar Opening Of Sail Series

Delayed a week by bad weather, Washington's sailing season was opened yesterday with the first of the spring series of races off Hains Point under auspices of the Potomac River Sailing Association.

Fitful breezes contributed to poor time and slow races, though spectators were granted one brief thrill when Barbara Myers' Minx and Challenger, in the 20-foot class, crossed the line in a photo finish. The committee ruled Minx won by a turnbuckle in the time of 1:18.43. Challenger's time for the 2 miles was 1:18.44.

Fan Tan IV Wins

First place in the comet class was taken by Leslie Wright's Fan Tan IV in 1:28.18. Austin Dodge's Nandua was second in 1:33.07.

The snipe class race went to Eleanor, with W. W. Valentine at the tiller. The only other contestant in this class did not finish.

In the three handicap races, Class A was won by Sandpiper, Louis B. Geiser, in 0:53.38; Class B by Black Cat, R. W. Barnhard, in 1:23.40, and Class C by Flighty, A. J. Alger, in 1:25.38. Second in Class A was Wastrel, in 1:7.37. No boats besides the winners finished in Classes B and C.

Takes Penguin Class

Little 12-foot Judy ran away with the Penguin class, W. W. Heintz, assisted by Mrs. Heintz, bringing her across in 56:15. Second was Cats Paw, George A. Dankers, jr., in 1:10.54.

So undependable was the wind that all except the 20-foot, Comet and Snipe classes were held to one lap over the course up Georgetown Channel, round Hains Point and up Washington Channel. The first three classes sailed two laps each.

Classes A, B, and C and the Penguins started in wind which slacked to a dead calm, leaving many boats to drift backward across the starting line. Some of these did not get into the races at all.

The committee, officiating from Robin Hood's cruiser Folly, included A. H. Clephane, chairman; U. S. Lambert, jr., and C. E. Miller.

Walker's Hit Scores Case For Victory

32,000 Fans See 10 Inning Game; Leonard Allows Six Hits

By Shirley Povich.

Gerald Walker cracked out a basehit in the tenth inning to liberate the climactic cheer of an alternately tense and howling mob of 32,000 Griffith Stadium customers yesterday. His single into left field beat the Yankees, 3 to 2, and delivered Washington's fifth straight victory to Pitcher Dutch Leonard.

The Yankee lost the ball game in the wake of a tactical error. They ordered Pitcher Johnny Murphy to purposely walk Buddy Lewis in the tenth, a forgivable mistake perhaps, because still vivid with them was the memory of Lewis' game-winning hit in an identical situation the day before.

George Case inspired the Nats' winning run with a display of the speed that fetched him the league's base-running championship last year. With one out in the tenth, he pushed a punt past Pitcher Murphy and beat it out. Then, with Lewis at bat, he stole second for the second time during the game. The Yanks went strategic, walked Lewis and contrived to bring Walker to the plate.

It was no dice. Walker lashed the first pitch offered by Murphy into deep left field for a line-drive single and Case sped home to score with an unnecessary slide.

Champs Drop to Seventh

Into seventh place slipped the champion Yankees on the impact of their third straight defeat. Rebounding from a four-game losing streak with their fifth triumph in a row, the Nats moved into a third-place tie with Detroit.

Dutch Leonard, emerging as a winning pitcher after two failures this season, outlasted two Yankee hurlers—Steve Sundra and Murphy. It was a rare pitching duel between Leonard and the Yankee pair, with each club collecting only six hits.

An inning before the Nats won the ball game, a cruel break for Leonard enabled the Yanks to tie the score at 2-2 in the ninth, after he had pitched a string of six scoreless innings in which he allowed the Yankees only one hit. The knuckle ball, with which he had been baffling the Yanks, boomeranged in the ninth.

Late Throw Costly

After Leonard struck out Selkirk to seal more tightly his seeming triumph, Charley Keller lashed one of his pitched over Buddy Lewis' head against the right field wall, and not content with a double, sped toward third. Only because Jimmy Bloodworth was tardy in relaying Lewis' throw, did Keller make third safely.

On the next pitch, the 32,000, who blotted out every seat in the park and jam-packed the aisles, groaned. It was a knuckle ball that bounced off Rick Ferrell's mitt for a passed ball and Keller fled home with a gift run that tied the score.

But Keller was the last Yankee to reache base against Leonard. He struck out Joe Gordon to end the ninth, and in the tenth he disposed of Henrich, Dahlgren and Murphy in one-two-three order.

Zeke Bonura joined the Washington forces for the game and was noisily welcomed by the customers, but beyond drawing a base on balls in the fourth inning, he contributed nothing to the Nats' attack.

Four of the six hits made by the Yankees were surrendered by Leonard in the first two innings. He yielded a run in the second when Dickey, Gordon and Dahlgren singled, but the Yanks muffed a chance

Lombardi Paces Reds In Victory Over Pirates

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, April 28.—Paced by Ernie Lombardi's first home run of the season, the Cincinnati Reds took a decisive 8-2 victory from Pittsburgh today, their second straight over the Pirates.

The big catcher who led National League batting in 1938 knocked the ball over the scoreboard in the second inning after doubles by Bill Werber and Lonnie Frey started the scoring in the first.

With the Pirates on the run, Cincinnati batters then proceeded to collect 15 hits off Danny MacFayden and two relief hurlers, Rip Sewell and Oadis Swigart.

Pittsburgh's two runs were collected in the second. Lee Handley singled to right center, scoring Virgil Davis, who was walked by Junior Thompson. The pitcher who wont the entire distance for the Reds, allowing only five

Dodgers' Winning Streak Brings Out Figure Filberts

By the Associated Press

New York, April 28.—The sensational eight-game winning streak of the Brooklyn Dodgers in the National League has the figure filberts grouping for the record books again and here are the answers:

In the Union Association, which existed only during the season of 1884, St. Louis won its first 20 games from April 20 to May 22. The same year in the National League, New York won its first 12.

Two clubs have won nine in a row—Boston of the National League in 1888, and New York of the National League in 1918.

The most recent string of similar length was seven for the New York Yankess of the American League, in 1933.

Mark Light Wins Race at Reading

Reading, Pa., April 28 (AP).—After narrowly escaping a crackup when his car spun on the first lap of the original start, Mark Light, of Lebanon, came back to win the 20-lap feature of the Eastern A. A. A. auto-racing inaugural on the half-mile Fair Grounds Track today. More than 20,000 fans were present as he repeated last year's victory.

'Nice to Be Back in Big Leagues,' Says Bonura

Zeke Bonura, looking anything but sylph-like and admitting that he had weight to take off, joined the Nats before the game . . . "It's wonderful to be back in the big leagues, hah hah," laughed big Zeke with a nice backhand slap at the N. L. . . . Zeke offered a simple explanation for his failure to report to the Nats on Saturday . . . he didn't hear about the deal until late Friday night and needed the time to settle his affairs in New York . . . Bonura's presence caused Bucky Harris to juggle his batting order . . . Harris moved Gerald Walker to third place and appointed Bonura to the mop-up job in fourth position . . . Zeke didn't get a ball out of the infield all day, and declared he will start morning batting practice at Griffith Stadium . . . "I need it," he said . . . "I haven't played an inning in more than two weeks." . . . the Yankees were asnarling, irritable gang yesterday . . . Bill Dickey quarreled with Umpire Bill Summers on a foul strike by Travis in the fourth inning for five full minutes . . . and when Summers called Joe Gordon out on a pop foul in the seventh, the entire Yankee gang, including Manager Joe McCarthy, stormed out of the dugout to protest that Ferrell caught the ball after it hit the backstop screen . . . Summers compromised by sticking to his decision . . . despite the passed ball that gave the Yanks the tying run in the ninth, Ferrell caught a smart game . . . the knuckle ball on which Keller scored was the only pitch that got away from Ferrell despite the fact that 70 per cent of Leonard's pitches were knucklers . . . The Nats' hardest drive of the game wasn't a base hit . . . it was a line drive off Bloodworth's bat in the third inning which George Selkirk speared with his gloved hand in deep left . . . the S. R. O. sign was hung out a half hour before game time. Cecil Travis came up with the Nats' fanciest play when he made a pirouetting grab of Crosetti's smash in the sixth . . . the Yankees are probably willing to lose any day that Joe Gordon makes two errors, because on that basis the Yanks wouldn't lose a half dozen games a year.

Furr Predicts Quick Kayo of McDowell Tomorrow at Arena

D. C. Welter Names 4th As Last Heat

Betting of 12-Round Return Engagement To Be Even, However; Foes Finish Training

Winding up training for his 12-round bout with Wild Bill McDowell tomorrow night at Turner's Arena, Phil Furr yesterday predicted a knockout for the first time during his career.

The picture of confidence despite the fact he was beaten recently by his Dallas, Texas rival, the Washington welterweight has designated the fourth as the round in which McDowell will be chilled.

Hands In Great Shape

"If Henry Armstrong can dit it, then I can do it too," Furr announced cockily." I like to slug toe to toe. My hands are in great shape and I'm hitting harder and stepping faster. I'll go after him with both hands pumping blows and I'll keep punching until he drops."

Furr confided to Matchmaker Gabe Menendez his plan of attack consisted of a three-round "feeler-out" and then "bang, bang, bang," in the fourth. "I let him fool me with his left last time. I was a sucker for it too many times," he added. "I had him down for a count of five in the fifth and should have kept him there. But I let him run away with me. It'll be different Tuesday."

Betting Even Odds

Despite Furr's absolute confidence in his ability to even the score with McDowell, betting on the fight probably will be at even odds.

McDowell ended his training yesterday at Mme. Beys, in near Jersey, where he has been working with Lou Ambers. His manager, Bill Daley, informed Matchmaker Menendez by long-distance telephone that Bill is in razor-sharp condition and anxious to erase Furr from the local picture.

Norman Hurdman, Canada, and Mayson Padlo, of Philadelphia, will meet in a rematch semifinal eight-rounder.

Three four-round bouts, yet to be announced, will complete the card.

Cards Finally Show Power, Beat Cubs, 7-5

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, April 28.—The tremendous power of the St. Louis Cardinals showed itself with extra-base force for the first time this season today as they defeated the Chicago Cubs, 7 to 5.

Held without a home run in their first eight games, the Cards hammered three off Big Bill Lee. Joe Medwick and Johnny Mize hit homers in succession in the fourth inning, and Don Gutteridge parked the ball with two men on base in the fifth. Medwick also hit two doubles and Don Padgett got a pair of two-baggers.

The Cubs' sluggers were Hank Leiber with two doubles and Bill Nicholson with a double and a single. His single came with the bases loaded in the fifth, sending two runs across the plate.

Bill McGee, who started for the Cardinals, and Lee both were knocked out of the box. Vern Olsen for the Cubs and Clyde Shoun for the Cardinals pitched shutout ball in relief roles.

Jasper Post Wins to Open Title Defense

American Legion Baseball Champions Beat Ft. Stevens, 6-5

Sergt. Jasper Post, winner of the American Legion Junior Baseball League title the last two years, opened its 1940 defense of the crown yesterday with a 6-5 victory over Fort Stevens on the Ellipse.

sAingle by Mike Denikos in the ninth brought across the two runs that brought the Jasperman from behind and gave them the nod Dave Wilkerson, who relieved Bob Hill in the fourth frame, was the winning pitcher.

The other opening day clash on the Ellipse saw Cooly-McCullough nine turn in a 6-1 triumph over Costello, with an uprising in the seventh. Cordell allowed only five hits in the winning eort, while his mates rang up nine off Costello's Bill Jones.

Henry H. Barnard Wins National Club Skeet Feature

Warming up their guns for the North-South shoot to be staged next Saturday and Sunday, members and visitors at the National Capital Skeet Club engaged in the board of directors' shoot yesterday, with sterling silver prizes in scratch and handicap firing.

Star of the event, during which a total of 12,000 clay birds were shattered, was Henry H. Barnard, who won the scratch section with a perfect score in 100 shots. Other winners in the order of their finish were George Deyoe, 96x100; Dr. Don Johnson, 96x100; and Fred Ramsdel, 95x100.

Barnard's 13-year-old daughter, Josephine, with a handicap of 35 beat male firers in the final event with a total of 107. Bill Coe was second with 104 along with R. C. Ridgeway, R. H. Hufford and C. S. Hottel tied for fourth with 103, and Leonard Williams was sixth with 102.

Nats Again Beat Yankees, 3 to 2

for a big inning when Dahlgren was nnipped at second trying to stretch his blow to a double.

That one run loomed increasingly important as the Nats moved through the first four innings without making a hit against Sundra. But with one out in the fifth, Jimmy Pofahl drove a two-bagger past Rolfe and Rick Ferrell tied the score with a well-tagged single to left.

From the most unexpected source the Nats received a run in the sixth that put them in a 2-1 lead. Gerald Walker beat out a hit to Crosetti with one out and then the Nats flashed their speed on the bases, with Walker stealing second. Bonura could merely move Walker to third with a grounder to Crosetti, but Joe Gordon, incomparable second baseman of the Yanks, muffed a ground ball by Travis that permitted Walker to score.

Man of the Month

By Arch McDonald
Station WJSV Baseball Broadcaster

Again this season, The Washington Post and Station WJSV conduct The Man of the Month contest to determine the Nats' most valuable player for each month. Following each game, Arch McDonald will distribute points to the Washington players as he deems performances merit. The Post will reward each winner of the Man of the Month contest with a $50 merchandise order.

The race for Man of The Month honors tighten considerably as a result of yesterday's performances by the Nats. Points were awarded as follows, on the basis of the 3-2 victory over the Yanks.

To Dutch Leonard, eight points, because he pitched six-hit ball in outlasting two Yankee hurlers, walking only one batter, and because he bore down magnificently throughout the game.

To Gerald Walker, seven points, because he broke up the ball game with his hit in the tenth, because he made two of the Nats' six hits, and because the base he stole enabled the Nats to score a run in the sixth.

To George Case, five points, because he stole two bases during the game, and because he made the winning run possible by beating out a bunt in the tenth and stealing second.

To Rick Ferrell, three points, because his single scored Jimmy Pofahl with the run that tied the score at 1-1 in the fifth.

To Pofahl, two points, because his two-bagger in the fifth was the first hit off Sundra and eventuated as a run. The totals:

Buddy Lewis	18	Al Hollingsworth	7
Gerry Walker	17	Jimmy Pofahl	7
"Dutch" Leonard	16	Walter Masterson	6
George Case	15	Jake Early	5
Jimmy Bloodworth	12	Rick Ferrell	5

Walter Hagen's Subpar 71 Features Match at East Potomac

Haig, Roy Smith Win Match, 1 Up

Cliff Spencer and Bob Morris Lose on 18th
Quarles, Johnson and Nader in Johnson Cup Tie at Congressional; Vailes Win at Kenwood

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Appearing five minutes ahead of time at East Potomac to the surprise of some 1,500 spectators, Walter Hagen then showed his admirers he was still capable of sub-par shotmaking yesterday afternoon by playing the municipal course in 71 as he and Roy Smith defeated the pro-amateur duo of Cliff Spencer and Bob Morris, 1 up.

Hagen gave the crowd a treat with his usual showmanship tactics, and in addition played the best golf of the day. He was repeatedly up with host pro Cliff Spencer, one of the longest drivers in this section. His nines were 35-36 against a par of 36-36, 72.

"The Haig" pulled a typical Hagen trick on the fifth hole of B course. After Spencer chipped in the cup from off the green for a par, Hagen told his partner to get his par, so he could go for his birdie. Smith got down in two putts and Hagen nonchalantly stepped up and knocked in a 30-footer for a birdie and the hole.

Smith, medalist in the current East Potomac spring tournament, saved the match on the last hole when he blasted out of a trap within a foot of the cup and holed the putt to protect the 1-up lead. Hagen, with 4 for a 70, was short in 2 and took 5, while Spencer and Morris parred the hole.

The winners were 2-up at the ninth, and turned in a best ball of 67 for the round. Spencer, with a pair of 36s for a 72, and Morris were 68. The amateurs scored approximate 75s.

CONGRESSIONAL

Congressional Club members, opening the season with the annual Walter Johnson Trophy play and other side events, turned out in record numbers, while three tied with net 70s for the Johnson Cup.

C. B. Quarles, with 88-18, 70; F. E. Johnson, 84-14, 70, and Al Nader, 93-33, 70, will play off sometime this week for the trophy. Pat Winkler's 78 won gross honors, while F. J. Neuland had the least putts, 28, and L. C. Rodeno won the chiping contest, with a shot 4½ feet from the cu on the 16½ hole. W. B. Rumle's 255-yard drive on the eighth hole won the driving contest over the favored Charley Malone, the Redskin end finishing second with a 250-yard clout.

C. W. Hammett was low net scorer in the club breakfast foursomes, with 89-18, 71, while the winning foursome was composed of J. M. Strait, J. A. Sullivan, A. D. Waring and E. McFarland. Each player adds his handicap to par figures and the quartet with the score nearest the total is the winner. The winners shot 391, against their net total of 369.

Second low net went to Dr. C. E. Coulon with 87-19, 68, while four were tied with net 69 and finished in the prize list, F. J. Schrider, 85-16, 69; L. M. Shade, 85-16, 69; F. U. Haines, 88-19, 69, and Robert Barry, 89-20, 69.

CAPITAL

G. H. Brewer posted low net score of 65 in the Capital Club's full handicap tournament, pairing nines of 45 for a 90, minus a 25 handicap. Three players tied for second with net 68's while five more were deadlocked a stroke higher.

The 68's were: D. L. Shuck, 85-17, 68; E. P. Redick, 82-14, 68, and H. E. Deel, 81-13, 68. Frank White, low gross scorer, was among the 69 net totals, shooting 73-4, 69, while others were: D. L. Cane, 91-22, 69; George Borsari, 77-8, 69; L. J. Manders, 87-18, 69, and Hal Hines, 87-18, 69.

Club champion White played the back nine in one under par 34 and added it to an outgoing 39 for the 73, best gross score of the day.

ARMY AND NAVY

Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Schaeffer won the Army and Navy mixed scotch foursome play with 98-19, 79, two strokes better than the runner-up team of Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Jones, 96-17, 81.

McKimmie Resumes Pro Teaching Job

Cliff McKimmie, former professional at Army and Navy, Hagerstown, and also the proprietor of a golf school here, announced his return to pro golf teaching at Brooke Grubb's golf range, north of Silver Spring.

McKimmie, now a Government employe, did not touch a stick for four years until he played in the open qualifying round last year, and he only missed qualifying by a few shots. He plans a more active season this year, however, and will start teaching at Grubb's Wednesday night, and will continue at nights and Saturdays and Sundays.

American Legion League Is Opened

The Sons of the American Legion Softball League got off to a flying start yesterday with Killeen Squadron taking a slugfest from Sergeant Jasper, 17 to 11, and National Cathedral swamping Police-Fire, 15 to 2. Other games were postponed due to inadequate policing of Monument diamonds 9 and 10.

Home runs featured the first game, no less than five circuit clouts rattling off the bats of the two contenders. Rex Beach and Fatty Bell crashed out three hits apiece.

A seven-run uprising in the second inning put the game on ice for Cathedral. Fisher with four hits, Trimble and B. Collins with three each, were the leading hitters. George had a perfect day at bat for the losers.

PENN RELAYS ROUNDUP

The three titles Maryland won Friday and Saturday were exactly three times as many as Terrapins had been able to win in the 45 preceding Carnivals . . . Georgetown, on the strength of Blozis' double triumph, moved up into a tie for sixth place with Michigan in total number of Penn Relay championships . . . Host Penn tops the list followed by Yale, Ohio State, Chicago and Harvard . . . Explaining his miserably slow time and defeat by Mehl in the special mile race Chuck Fenske said his spikes were too short, while Venzke said he was not in shape because of his recent and unsuccessful political race . . . To make it unanimous then, Mehl complained his spikes were too long . . . All of which it water under the bridge insofar as observers were concerned, for none of three seemed to exert themselves . . . Jim Kehoe, Maryland's crack half miler, made a deep impression on some of the scribes who were viewing him for the first time.

MUNHALL

According to reliable information one of the reasons Blozis could do no better than 154 feet 6⅛ inches in winning the discus was a meddling spectator who insisted on showing the former national scholastic champion how to heave the disc . . . Penn and Penn State are fueding again, we hear, which explains why State sent most of its best trackmen to Des Moines for the Drake Relays instead of the Penn Carnival . . .

Comparsion of winning times and distances in the Penn and Drake relays, which for years have been trying to outdo each other, casts little light on the question of which drew the stronger field this year. . . . Better marks generally were made at Penn but most of the winning performances were so close that the results might easily have been altered if the victors had been competing against each other instead of 1,000 miles away. . . . For instance Pitt won the 440-yard relay at Penn in 41.7 while Texas did 41.8 at Drake, and N. Y. U. was timed at 3:16.1 in winning the mile relay while Michigan was timed 3:16 flat at Drake.

To Blozis goes credit for turning in a performance at Penn that Drake couldn't even approach. . . . His meet record shot put throw of 55 feet 5⅜ inches was more than six feet better than that of Indiana's Harris who won at Drake with 48 feet 9¼ inches. . . . The few drops of rain that fell on Franklin Field Saturday just before the big mile race half heartedly maintiained a precedent of many years standing that bad weather attends one of the two days of the event. . . .A reader telephoned last night to correct an error in The Post's account of the relays, said Jack Thomas and not John Bredbenner was Central's leadoff runner in the high school mile relay championship. . . . Despite its defeat by the Bishop Loughlin team, who tied the meet record for the event, Central came through with a great performance. . . . The Viking quartet of Thomas, Clayton Norris, Bill Edgerton and Al Hayden was clocked at 3:28. . . . Kehoe and Mason Chronister who had only run a total of a mile and one-half in the space of 70 minutes in helping Maryland to two titles Saturday were disappointed when Coach Swede Eppley refused to let them run with the mile relay quartet. . . . Incidentally, it would have been interesting to have seen where the Terps would have finished in that mile race had not leadoff runner Cotton Warfield been spilled in a collision.

WHO CARES DEPARTMENT—High school athletes of today are running far faster than did college trackmen of 1895 . . . The first recognized American college recrod for the mile relay was 3:34.4, by Harvard in 1895. Contrast that with the present one of under 3:12, held by Stanford . . .

MISCELLANEOUS—Biggest factor in the recovery of Grove's pitching arm, according to doctors, was Lefty's swearing off cigars . . . Mose used to smoke as many as 12 a day and the medicos say the nicotine affected his arms, whereas it usually affects the legs . . . Roy Cullenbine, Detroit free agent who got $25,000 for signing with Brooklyn, probably has only one real regret over leaving the American League . . . That is because he can no longer bat against Feller off whom he slammed three homers last year, two in one game . . . Scrawled across the top of each page in the notebook Philly Pitcher Hugh Mulcahy keeps on findings about enemy batsmen is the notation "Don't Walk Him" . . . Villanova, once refused, has reapplied for application to the I. C. 4-A.

Bethesda Opens League Play With Victory

Budge Beats Barnes to Win Open Net Title

Redhead Then Pairs With Victim to Take Doubles Championship

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., April 28 (AP).—Don Budge, redhaired Californian who turned pro after winning every major amateur tennis title, defeated Bruce Barnes, of Austin, Tex., today for the National Open tennis title.

After dropping the first set and once having his service smashed for a love game loss, the national pro singles champion won a four-set victory, 5—7, 6—4, 6—3, 6—3.

He then paired with Barnes, 1938 Open champion, to win the doubles championship from Vincent Richards, of New York, and Berkley Bell, of New Jersey, 6—3, 6—4, 12—10.

The singles title gave Budge $400 and his share of the doubles payoff amounted to $180.

Barnes ran up a 5-3 lead in games in the first set when he found Budge's forehand weak, but dropped the next two to the carot-top ace. He came back to win the set by allowing budge but 2 points in the next two games.

Trailing three games to five in the second set, Barnes broke Budge's vaunted service to take the sixth game at love, then dropped the next on his own service to lose the set.

The third and fourth sets were easily Budge's as the former amateur king turned on the pressure, chasing Barnes from side to side of the court.

Broadway Mob Pays Jacobs Last Respects

Sports and Political Leaders Attend Fight Manager's Rites

By the Associated Press

New York, April 28.—Funeral services for Joe Jacobs, the fight manager whose big cigar, quick wit and flashy dress made him one of the town's legendary figures, were held today in a midtown memorial chapel packed to overflowing by "the Broadway mob."

Virtually all the town's fight managers, most of the top-flight sports writers, a smattering of city and State political figures, fighters, actors and gamblers paid what Rabbi Leo Ginsburg said was a more eloquent tribute to the little man than he could pay in words.

Numbered among the honorary pallbearers were Tony Galento, who Jacobs guided from the fistic scrap heap to the position of challenger for the heavyweight title; Harry Mendel, six-day bike race impresario; Max Baer, one-time heavyweight champion; Jimmy Braddock, another former titleholder; Gen. John J. Phelan, chairman of the New York State Boxing Commission, and Jimmy (the Boy Bandit) Johnston, voluble fight promoter.

Burial was in the family plot in a Long Island cemetery.

Jacobs', who coined such bits of Broadway-ese as "we wuz robbed" and "I shoulda stood in bed," died Wednesday night in a doctor's office of a heart attack.

Semipro Clubs Open Season Next Sunday

New York, April 28 (AP).—More than 500,000 baseball players, representing an estimated 60,000 semipro clubs, will officially open the 1940 season in mass play in different sections of the country next Sunday.

They all will be shooting for the national title and a chance to meet the San Juan, Puerto Rico, champions in the semipro World Series next September.

Pimlico Opens 'Stake-a-Day' Meeting With 2 Features Today

Flat Runners And Jumpers See Action

Spring Handicap Lures Sun Egret And Other Sprint Aces at Baltimore

By Walter Haight

Ancient Pimlico, where it is said the ghosts of the last century's Preakness winners get together with gobblins as riders and stage phantom races in the dead of the night, opens its famous "stake-a-day" meeting with two stakes today. The race track which Baltimore built around will offer an average of about $20,000 in daily purses with the annual running of the Preakness a week from the coming Saturday as the Mr. Big event.

As if the $2,600 added Baltimore Spring Handicap wasn't lure enough for a Monday program, Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt and his associates also are offering the $2,000 added Pimlico Spring Maiden Steeplechase as the first timbertopping of the 1940 season at a Maryland track.

The Spring Handicap has drawn a field worthy of the good purse. Nine sprinters of the Nation's first flight were named over the weekend for the test of six furlongs and there should be much hustling and scuffling before a winner is declared.

Sun Egret Entered

For instance, there's Sun Egret, the A. C. C. Stable's speedster; Airflame, stake winner from the Millsdale Stable; Slow Motion and Battle Jack, from the J. W. Y. Martin barn, not to speak of such notable short-distance horses as the Circle M Ranch's Speed To Spare, Gustave Ring's Lady Maryland, Hugh W. Jackson's Ariel Toy, Winston Guest's Drudgery and W. H. Lipscomb's Redlin.

Sun Egret, a capable weight carrier, has been assigned top weight of 126 pounds. However, the poundage has been distributed in a manner that gives every member of the field a chance.

This will be the sixth running of the Spring Handicap. Wise Prince won the inaugural of the event in 1935. Cycle, Aneroid and Infantry won in the order named, and Old Rosebush carried the colors of Mrs. Tony Pelleteri to victory last year. Aneroid's time of 1:11 4-5 is the record for the race.

Today's card is just a sample of what is in store for turf fans hereabouts for the remainder of the week. Tomorrow, 3-year-olds will have a race to themselves in the $2,500 added Rennert Handicap, over the 6 furlongs course. This is the seventeenth running of the Rennert, which was taken last year by Trailer, in the colors of Boss Vanderbilt.

Gittings on Wednesday

Wednesday will bring the Gittings Handicap, $2,500 added, for 3-year-olds and upward at a mile and a sixteenth. Masked General and Honey Cloud, first and second in last Saturday's thrilling Philadelphia Handicap, are scheduled to meet again. General Mowlee, Bull Whip, Filisteo and Sketchbook are among the eligibles.

The memories of two Maryland sportsmen who passed away during the past year will be honored by the features on Thursday and Friday. The first is the $2,500 added The Ral Parr, formerly the Masquerader, to be contested Thursday, and the $2,500 added Jervis Spencer Steeplechase Handicap, formerly the Green Spring Valley Steeplechase Handicap, to be run the following day.

While the Kentucky Derby is scheduled at Churchill Downs on Saturday, the $10,000 added Pimlico Oaks, a test for 3-year-old fillies at a mile and a sixteenth. This is the 17th running of this affair annexed in 1939 by Mrs. Pelleteri's Alms with Jockey Charley Stevenson up.

RACING NOTES—In answer to inquiry; you are both right. . . . Watch Him and Infantry, together with Tempestuous, share the track record for a mile and a sixteen at Pimlico . . . the mark is 1:44. . . . The number of nominations for the Kentucky Derby this year were 127, the largest since 1931 when 130 names were on the list with Twenty Grand winning. . . . Louisville's Chamber of Commerce maintains an office for aiding persons to get rooms in homes during the Derby week . . . friends who obtained lodging that way last year were pleased with their accommodations . . . however, there will be "all-expense" excursions by the railroads . . . that as Edgar Horn, of the Turf and Sport Digest, airing the Wood Memorial last Saturday. . . . I wonder if there is any truth in the rumor that Roman Soldier will be Alan Clarke's sud horse next year.

A Maryland Creek Gets a New Dose of Elusive Trout

Trout streams of Frederick County, Md., became doubly attractive to anglers recently when the U. S. Bureau of Fisheries put in a new stock of the prize game fish. Two bureau employes are shown here dumping fish into the water from their special cans. The stream, bubbling away in the background, should make all trout anglers' mouths water

Bill Ackerman

On Fishing

The first news of the Lerner-American Museum marlin and broadbill swordfish expedition to the coasts of Chile and Peru come through last week, and they have already taken two broadbills. Enough to start the scientific members of the expedition on their studious ways.

ACKERMAN.

Mike Lerner, guided by the Miami charter boatman, Capt. Douglas Osborne, caught the first fish, weighing 380 pounds, in 20 minutes, while the second, weighing but 62½ pounds required 40 minutes to boat.

Tides, currents and temperatures are being noted, as well as the stomach contents of the big billed fish—all very important, if anglers and scientists are ever to know definitely of their migrations.

Hardheads and trout, as well as striped bass are being taken along the coast from Cape Charles to Chincoteague. Definite indication that we will soon be angling for the former in upper bay waters.

Offshore, the commercial mackerel fishermen are taking the first of the run as they strike inshore. Ocean City charter boats are expecting to start trolling for them by the end of this week—in fact, there is little doubt but what another fishing season is just about ready to open up.

Capt. Crawford Savage, who has been fishing out of Palm Beach this winter is back with a new twin-engined Matthews, to add to his fleet of three marlin boats. Capt. Lev Raymond's Lev-Lou, at Miami throughout the winter season, has been laying here at the Water street docks this past week. He is shoving off late this evening for Atlantic City for his spring haul.

The Matthews "38" of the C. L. Parker's, fitting out now at the Corinthian, will shortly be heading for Ocean City—and the marlin schools. As will George O. Sutton's "Happy Days," fiting out now in Norfolk.

News from Cat Cay about the tournament late next month seems to indicate this year's competition is going to be tougher than last spring. For, among the contestants having already signified their intention to compete are Ernest Hemingway, Winston Guest, Errol Flynn, Tommy Shevlin, Mike Tarafa, Thorvald Sanchez, and last year's champion, Julio Sanchez.

The $10,000 challenge of the Cat Cay tuna team to the Catalina Tuna Club, has not been accepted as yet, but it has been layed before the board by Joseph D. Peeler, for action at the next meeting.

C. N. Cook, manager of Cat Cay, is in Miami now looking for an auto-giro or a blimp to use in finding the schools. He reports more than 40 of the finest sportfishing cruisers in the Miami area are registered, and with the addition of a few more expected this week, will just about fill the list that can be accomodated.

Bimelech Arrives at Derby Scene

Four Other Hopefuls Come From Maryland, Including Pictor

By the Associated Press

Louisville, Ky., April 28.—Bimelech, the people's choice to win the sixty-sixth running of the Kentucky Derby next Saturday, arrived at Churchill Downs today along with four less highly-regarded derby eligibles.

A crowd of several hundred persons watched silently as Col. E. R. Bradley's hope for his fifth Kentucky Derby stepped proudly from a van which brought him here from the colonel's Idle Hour Farm near Lexington.

Putting in their appearance also were four other derby candidates, including Sky Dog and Gallant Dream from the Harry M. Warner Stables, whose arrival surprised hardboots at the Downs.

The Warner eligibles came from Maryland with Royal Man, Harold A. Clark's colt, and W. L. Brann's Pictor, winner of the Chesapeake Stakes.

Word at the Downs indicated that of the contingent only Arnold Hanger's Wood Memorial winner, Dit, and the Greentree Stables' Red Dock, second in the Wood, would make the trip here. Both are due tomorrow morning.

It was reported C. V. Whitney's Flight Command and Carrier Pigeon would not start in the Derby because of their disappointing showing in the Wood Memorial.

Shady Brook Farm's Connaught was the only hope working out today, going a mile in 1:41 2-5 in preparation for Tuesday's mile Derby trial.

Bimelech also is scheduled to run in the trial.

Watch The Scientists!

By Roger W. Babson

Babson Bullish in Chemical Trade

UNCERTAINTY is the dictator of the business and security worlds today. It rules with as iron a hand as Goering and Goebbels. General wages are good, production volume is satisfactory, earnings and dividends are excellent. Yet, business enthusiasm and security trading are at relatively the lowest ebb in history. The weary comeback to every suggestion for progressive action is:

"No one knows what's going to happen!" It's the pat, convenient, universal 1940 alibi for doing nothing!

ROGER W. BABSON

Several men in my organization are just back from trips during which they pretty well covered the country. They report that, "I'm sitting tight" is the business man's most popular refrain. Their only shading of this was by adding that less pessimism is noticeable in Texas and Nevada than in other States. Texas is booming. The depression, recession and decession never hit her as hard as the rest of the United States. Nevada is America's "tax sanctuary." She has no State income tax (either personal or corporate), no sales tax, no gift tax, no inheritance tax. Thousands of wealthy people are flocking into this tax oasis every year.

MY COLLEAGUES report that business everywhere is better than a year ago. There has been a drop since New Year's, but not so big a slump as many people have been led to believe. As measured by the Federal Reserve Board Index—which I believe has been somewhat misleading—the drop equals 20 per cent. The reserve index is composed of figures covering 43 lines of industrial activity. Such up or down businesses as steel and textiles are given undue importance. My Babsonchart, however, is made up of figures representing 54 lines of activity and gives a much broader picture of American business as a whole. It is interesting to note, therefore, that the Babsonchart is down only 12 per cent from January 1.

Yet, despite good business, good wages, good dividends, people are all at sea. The war and the election have them worried sick. Too many key people are needlessly bewildered—they are like a ship without a compass or rudder. But I will make a prediction which may be of help: War or peace, New Dealer or conservative, business and the markets will be higher the day after election than they are now. How do I figure that? Because it is only uncertainty which is holding things back now. Last summer the uncertainty of war or peace threw a wet blanket over business. The moment war was declared, people thought the situation was clear ahead. Consequently, business and the markets soared.

SO TODAY things are being held back by uncertainty. By November 6—perhaps before that—we will know who the President for 1941-45 will be. Most people believe a Democrat would be bad for business; but many also believe a Republican would be bad for business. Considering that the Democrats are the consumers and the Republicans are the producers, whichever party wins I look for higher market prices. Moreover, by November 6, I think we will know pretty well whether World War II is to be an old-fashioned blood and thunder affair or just a battleless war of words and statistics. War means today just what it did 25 years ago—more business for America. Also, peace means a boom psychologically. It is a case of "tails I win, heads you lose."

Naturally, it is hard for people to believe that better business and higher prices lie ahead. They feel that every time they have tried to make plans in the last few years something unexpected has come along and upset the apple cart. So they have taken a box seat on the sidelines. They are keeping their money in the bank or they are investing in low-coupon bonds. They are not expanding. Yet, if there is any sound basis for their fears, they are taking just as much chance keeping their money in cash and low-yield, long-term bonds as by investing in stocks or a new business!

MANY READERS may wonder what magical industry I think is as bombproof as cash or Government bonds or savings deposits. My answer is chemicals. War or peace, New Deal or Old Deal, depression or prosperity, inflation or deflation, the chemical industry should come out on top. This is a chemical age. We have hardly scratched the surface. Chemical autos, trains, airplanes, clothing, furniture, houses, will be as commonplace in 50 years as rayon stockings and bakelite telephone sets are today. Upheavals in industry, more startling than those we have just witnessed in transportation, lie ahead in the next quarter century.

The chemical companies will be in the driver's seat. Wise are those young men who now get into the industry. And yet I name this only as an illustration. There are other "coming" industries. Those who are sincerely worried about the future of America should buy into, or work with, the chemical business. Most such companies yield as good a return as bank deposits, so-called top-notch bonds and annuities. And I had rather gamble with the scientists than with either Wall street or the New Dealers. My guess is that a group of ten leading chemical stocks will double in value in the next decade!

Yes, forget the bankers, but bank on the scientists. Forget the politicians, but tie to the technicians. Forget the laborites, but watch the laboratories. Forget the pessimists, but follow the chemists. Look upward, not downward; forward, not backward.

G. M. C. Earns $67,028,461 In 3 Months

March Quarter Net Equals $1.50 a Share Against $1.18 in 1939

By the Associated Press

New York, April 28.—Consolidated net earnings of General Motors Corporation, including equities in the earnings of subsidiaries not consolidated, for the March quarter totaled $67,028,461, or $1.50 a common share, compared with $53,177,928, or $1.18 per share for the corresponding 1939 quarter, it was announced today.

Alfred P. Sloan, jr., chairman, said in a letter to stockholders the upward movement in business "which set in about the middle of last year and which favorably affected the fourth quarter of that year, has been sufficiently maintained to result in a substantial increase in the volume of the corporation's business in the first quarter of 1940 over the same quarter of 1939." This applied, he said, only to domestic business, overseas trade having shown a sharp reduction, compared with a year ago.

Anaconda Wire & Cable Co.

Anaconda Wire & Cable Co. reported net income for the March quarter of $129,280, equal to 31 cents a capital share, compared with net loss of $77,161 in the March quarter last year.

Skelly Oil Co.

Skelly Oil Co. and subsidiaries reported net income in the March quarter rose to $773,281 after all charges from $239,080 in the comparable 1939 period. Per share earning on common stock, after preferred dividends, increased to 68 cents from 14 cents a year ago.

E. A. Golden, 56, Veterans' Official, Dies

Legion Commander For 8th District, Virginia, Succumbs

Ernest A. Golden, Veterans Administration official and commander of Eighth District of Virginia, American Legion, died last night at his home, 1218 North Stafford street, Arlington, Va. He was 56.

Past commander of Arlington Post No. 139, Mr. Golden during the World War was stationed at Fortress Monroe, Va., with the Coast Artillery. Stricken with influenza, he was left behind when his unit was sent overseas. A native of Harrisonburg, Va., he lived in Arlington County for the past 12 years, and was chief of the index file division of the Veterans Administration.

Surviving are his wife and three sons, Jack, Dudley G., and Ernest Allen, jr. Services will be held tomorrow at 2 p. m. in C. J. Ives funeral chapel, Clarendon, with the Rev. Andrew R. Bird, of Southern Presbyterian Church, Arlington, officiating. Burial will be in Arlington National Cemetery.

Contract Bridge

Speaking of buidding, an unusual phychological problem confronted contributor W. M. R. in his bidding of today's hand. He had to decide who was bluffing—his partner or his opponents—and try to make the bid that would best meet the situation.

He kne whis adversary would "save" over a small slam call at spades and so he jumped to seven, hoping it could be made, and that he might possibly win a "top" for his side, since the adversaries of other players would probably buy the hand at a seven-heart sacrifice. Alas, playing without the ace of trumps was a wrave handicap to the grand slam and down it went. The hand was dealt at the Bedford Bridge Club, Brooklyn. Here is what W. M. R. says:

"When West bid a heart, and my partner a spade, and East passed, I was up against it. Two legitimate bids could not be made against my hand. One was probably a distributional bid and the other a 'psyche.' My partner at least twice an evening relieves the tension of serious play by 'psyching.'

"I thought: If I bid six spades, Eddie O'Brien, West, will sacrifice at seven hearts; whereas, if I go immediately to the grand slam I will lose only 200 points, if doubled, and may possibly win 'top' on the board.

"When the final score came in I found that nobody had sacrificed at sever hearts. Two played the hand at clubs, one at five, and one at six, both making six; one played at four spades, making six, and the dthers bid and made a little slam at spades.

"At my wife's table she raised her partner to three hearts on the first round, against Warren Samson, who immediately went to five clubs, fearing his wife would not keep the bidding open.

"It seems my psychology was wrong, but most of the experts said I had made a very fine bid. My mistake was in thinking every opponent was an Eddie O'Brien. I shall have to go to my wife to learn the true art of deceptive bidding."

Air Corps Chief Tells Lessons Taught by War

Armor and Heavier Machine Guns Needed On Planes, He Says

By the Associated Press

Indianapolis, April 28.—Maj. Gen. H. H. Arnold, chief of the Army Air Corps, said tonight that recent fighting in Europe had taught America seven lessons in military airplane construction and had developed or confirmed new tactical doctrines.

He spoke at a dinner given by Raymond J. Kelly, of Detroit, American Legion national commander, at the close of the legion's eighth annual aerial roundup of memberships.

Terming the war in Europe "a full scale laboratory in which our fighting planes can be service-tested under war conditions at no cost to us," Gen. Arnold listed these lessons from recent air battles:

1. Leak-proof fuel tanks are needed by modern aircraft.

2. Military aircraft require some armor for vital parts.

3. Present armaments of war planes must be changed.

4. The .30-caliber machine-gun fire is not adequate against modern aircraft and must be stepped up to at least .50 caliber to insure a "positive kill."

5. The tendency is toward bigger guns for aircraft.

6. The bombers are easy prey to fighter aircraft unless equipped with tail guns.

7. More range must be built into bombers.

He said it had been demonstrated that airplanes should not engage in "piecemeal attacks" and that they must carry bombs designed for their objectives.

Modern air fighting, Gen. Arnold said, has shown the necessity for additional crew members, such as trained aerial navigators.

"Eight countries have been conquered in recent times largely as the result of air power," he said. "Air power has not yet been given the acid test that proves its real strength and power. It seems not unlikely that we are now moving into that sphere where it will be given a thorough tryout."

I can save you some trouble—there just isn't a single ticket at WJSV for this week's Glenn Miller shows. Sorry.

The boys are unleashing a new serial over WJSV today at 1 p. m., and it promises to be a pleasant quarter hour for them as likes their serials authentic and dramatic. It is called "Young Dr. Malone," and its sponsors have dedicated it to American doctors.

Beautiful Elizabeth Reller, who has starred in other CBS serials in the past, is being heard in the role of Dr. Malone's nurse and wife, sharing all the struggles of the medioco who abandons a small town practice for a more ambitious career in a big town hospital.

Setting a new pace in radio realism, the dramas reveal the true inside story of a doctor's life. To insure authentic medical background, the script authors have engaged the permanent services of a well-known consultant surgeon. He checks the accuracy of every script in which medical detail or routine is involved. Production is to be equally painstaking. Under the consultant's direction, surgical instruments, such as scalpers and retractors, will be used for sound effects.

During scenes laid in the operating room, masks will be worn by participtaing actors—not alone to muffle their voices to proper pitch, but to create the correct psychological effect.

LEAP YEAR LADY by ALMA SIOUX SCARBERRY

Shamrock O'Toole's troubles started when Karl Hetrick, whom she was to marry, wed Dagne Olsen instead and came to live in the Hetrick house next door. Smoky found a job in the chorus of a new musical show and there met Tex Stacy, cowboy singer. After the show opened successfully, Tex and Smoky were married. Tragedy followed quickly when Smoky's invalid father, Clancy, lost his life saving that of Dagne when the Hetrick house caught fire. Dagne died in the hospital, after a talk with Smoky, asking her forgiveness and saying she hoped Karl and Smoky would marry eventually. When Smoky returned to her role at the theater, Gogo LeMaire warned her not to take the part with Tex in his skit. But Tex walked in and bluntly warned LeMaire to stop annoying Smoky. Tex had been exceptionally kind, thoughtful and helpful with Smoky and it came as a keen shock when she was notified he was in the hospital, seriously injured. The doctor was gentle with Smoky, for Tex was unconscious and Smoky knew nothing of his people. It was necessary for her to make some arrangements to pay the expenses, so she decided to do it with Clancy's insurance. Mrs. Hetrick came to comfort Smoky.

Chapter 20

Shamrock turned away. "I—I married Tex because he's so good to me. He—he's a wonderful man."

"I—it's all so terrible," Mrs. Hetrick sobbed. "Like a terrible nightmare. Karlie getting in all that trouble and getting married. Then your father giving his life to save Dagne. Now your husband maybe won't live. Trouble always comes in bunches, Smoky."

"It seems like a dream to me too," Shamrock said wearily.

"And you're an actress now," Mrs. Hetrick smiled wanly. "You look so beautiful with all the new clothes, Smoky. But you don't look like yourself."

"I must get to the theater." Shamrock looked at the clock. "We need the money with Tex's hospital bills and all. I'll have to cash Pop's insurance, I guess."

"I'll walk to the subway with you." Mrs. Hetrick got up. Then she shook her head darkly. "Spendin' your father's insurance for hospital bills. It seems too bad when it's all you've got."

On the street Mrs. Hetrick asked: "Your husband's people, Smoky, can't they help with some money?"

"I've been looking for their address," said Shamrock.

Karl's mother looked shocked. "You—don't even know where his people live?"

"No," said Shamrock. "I'll find out when Tex can talk to me."

Mrs. Hetrick was silent for a little time, then she said: "Karl is free now, Smoky. Maybe things will turn out so you can be together, after all. Maybe this is God's way."

Smoky could not speak. Karl's mother put an arm around her. "You must forgive my poor boy, Smoky. Don't hold it against him for what happened. A man is like that when a woman throws herself at him. They'll take what they can get."

There wasn't a word of sympathy for Dagne Olsen. Smoky drew away from her old friend and said defensively: "Dagne has paid for her mistake. She loved Karl so much she didn't care what happened as long as she got him. Why do you blame her? She's dead."

The mother looked at Smoky in surprise. "She was a bad girl," she said coldly. "She ruined my boy's life. She burned our house with her cigarettes and killed your father."

Smoky stopped. "Oh," she gasped. "How can you be so hard-hearted? Dagne is dead."

Karl's mother said stonily: "It is better when a woman like that doesn't live.

Smoky stared at her old neighbor speechlessly, then without a word turned and walked across the street, leaving Mrs. Hetrick alone.

What Would She Do?

Poor Dagne. Her own father could not forgive her because she loved Karl Hetrick too much and Karl's mother despised her, even in death. Perhaps, after all, God had been kind in taking Dagne away from a man's world.

Karl was free. And if Tex died, she, Smoky, would be free. Mrs. Hetrick had said maybe things would turn out so she and Karl could be together after all. And if Tex lived, she could divorce him and marry Karl if she wanted to.

The interval in between would be just like a nightmare, maybe. And all the things she had planned with Karl would come true. She would leave the theater and take up her old life in Astoria. Maybe Karl would go back in the fire department and they would live in her house, now that the Hetrick home had burned down.

Dazedly Smoky went through the five numbers with the Ginger Snaps and listened to the words of sympathy from the members of the company at the theater. Torchy cried and kissed her and begged Smoky to let her know if there was anything in the world she could do to help her.

No Change in Tex

Before Smoky went home in the subway she went into a booth and called the hospital. The nurse on duty told her Mr. Stacy was just the same and that she would be telephoned at home the minute there was the slightest change in his condition.

Back in Astoria Smoky let herself into the empty house and sank into a chair in the living room wearily. It would be the first night she had ever spent alone in her life, but strangely she had no fear.

Somehow it was as though Clancy's presence still hovered over the couch and his special armchair and in his old room. A living presence that was not at all ghostly or to be feared.

After a time Smoky got up and went into Clancy's room and turned on the light. Things were just as he had left them, and Shamrock felt as though she would always have to keep them that way.

Clancy's pipe, with the ashes from his last smoke still in it, lay on the little table beside the bed. Smoky picked it up tenderly and sat down on the bed, hot tears stinging her eyes.

"Oh, Pop!" she said aloud. "Oh, Pop, what'll I do?"

Smoky sat for a long time holding the pipe and gradually some of the pressure left her tired brain and her heavy heart. It was as though Clancy's hands were soothing her head and his big gentle fingers playing with the silken strands of her red hair.

A Voice From the Past

What would Clancy do, Shamrock asked herself then. If he were there and she could ask him, what would he say? Suddenly, as if a voice had spoken to her, Smoky saw clearly the path of duty that lay before her.

And she knew, no matter what happened, that she must stand by Tex. He was her husband. True, it was a marriage that was almost like no marriage at all, because it had not been made in sincerity and love and honesty.

But Tex needed her. He loved her. And as long as he was ill and helpless and alone he must never let him down.

Smoky squared her shoulders. Putting down Clancy's pipe, she turned out the light and, going out, closed the door.

Tomorrow she would go to Mr. Hill, who was a lawyer, and would know all about how to convert Clancy's $5,000 insurance policy into cash. Then she would go to the hospital and make a deposit that would insure Tex the best medical care money could buy. That was what Clancy would want her to do. She was sure of it.

The lights were out in the living room. When the front doorbell rang, Smoky jumped in fright. It was after midnight and she wondered who could be calling at that hour.

More Mystery About Tex

It was a short, dark man who asked cryptically: "Are you Mrs. Stacy?"

"Yes," she said, trying not to show her fear.

He thrust a picture at her. "Can you identify this man?"

It was Tex. His hair was rumpled and he was smiling broadly in a big wool sweater with an H on the front of it.

"Yes," she said uncertainly. "That's my husband. Why do you want to know?"

The stranger smiled. "You'll find out! How long have you known him?"

Shamrock said uncertainly: "Why do you want to know? Who are you?" as she faced the stranger at the door.

The man stuck the picture back in his pocket. "I'm a detective. I've been looking for your husband for weeks."

Shamrock's hand went to her mouth in a gesture of fear. "You—you're a policeman? My—husband is in some kind of trouble? I'm sure he hasn't done anything wrong."

The man asked: "Where is he?"

Smoky said, suspiciously: "How do I know you're a detective?"

The stranger pulled a card out of his pocket.

Invites Stranger Into Home

She handed the card back to the man and said, trying to keep the quaver out of her voice: "Will you come in. It's cold with the door open."

"Thanks," said the stranger. "Are you alone, Mrs. Stacy?"

"Yes, I am."

The man sat down. "Well, you got nerve, lady. I got to hand it to you. Openin' the door and askin' me in. But maybe you ain't afraid of men."

Smoky flared angrily. "My father died this week and my husband is in the hospital. I can't afford to be afraid when I've got to be alone."

"Oh," said the man, and he looked embarrassed. "I'm sorry, Mrs. Stacy. No offense. We meet all kinds in this business. Now, about your husband. You say he's in the hospital."

"Yes," said Smoky. "He was thrown from a horse and injured very seriously today. He may not live."

To Be Continued.

Think of the squabbles we prevented! Think of the thousands of husbands who came home to wives as cheerful as cherubs after a whole day's shopping. Why, that Parking Building of ours is a veritable fountain of good cheer . . . it's an important civic benefit . . .

You'll find the charges extremely moderate, too. Ten cents for the first hour. Five cents for each additional half hour or fraction thereafter is all you pay for this shopping convenience.
